

Doxey Wilkerson Resigns from CP

Doxey Wilkerson, a member of the Communist Party's national committee has resigned from the party, it was made public last week. Wilkerson's resignation was contained in a letter to the party dated Nov. 25, and released by him to the press. Wilkerson said:

"I still cherish and will continue to work for the social goals which have long guided my adult life—an America where men of all races and creeds can walk together in dignity and equality, where thought and speech are truly free, where political processes are genuinely democratic, and where the vast material resources of our nation are geared to the people's needs.

"After long and mature deliberation, however, I have come—reluctantly but irrevocably—to the conclusion that, especially in the light of recent developments, the Communist Party no longer affords a framework within which I can make a constructive contribution to these ends.
