

Nagy Forms Interim Cabinet Representing Five Parties

Premier Imre Nagy of Hungary yesterday announced in Budapest the formation of an interim cabinet with representatives of five parties as a prelude to free elections and an end to one-slate elections. He also promised to start negotiations for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. The Budapest radio reported that Soviet troops already were evacuating Budapest.

However, artillery and small arms fire broke out sporadically in Budapest again, when some of the rebels apparently broke the cease fire agreement.

Nagy said all parties which existed and were legal in 1945 will become legal again. He said his new cabinet would contain representatives of the Social Democratic party, two prominent "Titoists," Geza Loczoney and Communist Party first secretary Janos Kadar; deputy premier Ferenc Erdei and Minister of Agriculture Bela Kovacs. Nagy said he proposed to the Communist Party's presidium that Kadar and Loczoney, both formerly imprisoned for their "Titoist" leanings, be named minister of state.

An announcement from the Ministry of Defense early yesterday said:

"The evacuation of Soviet troops from Budapest is continuing. The Hungarian army, police, youth workers and students units are taking over from Soviet troops the maintenance of peace and order."

Zoltan Tildy, Minister of State and former President and Premier, in a speech yesterday, promised the revival of all former political parties, the termination of peasant crop contributions to the state granaries and the possible release of Cardinal Jozsef Mindszenty "to take part in the liberation struggle."

Tildy added that Oct. 23, the day of the Budapest uprising, will be a national holiday and all who died in the fighting will be buried with military honors and their families cared for by the state.

A U. S. agency dispatch from Budapest said the insurgents still were holding out today in the narrow, slum streets surrounding Budapest's university clinics.

Rebels told newsmen they were interested only in the departure of the Russians and declared "there won't be peace here as long as we can see a single Russian tank."

Most of Budapest was quiet. Traffic was at a standstill and all shops, offices and factories were closed.

Only a few trucks carrying

Hungarian soldiers, ambulances with medical supplies, and trucks bringing food moved through the streets. There were no private cars, except for those of a handful of western reporters and diplomats.

A Budapest Radio broadcast said the Hungarian Army had ousted all secret police officers, including Army Chief of Staff Maj. Gen.

that Jesse Woods, missing Negro Woods was kidnapped from Wildwood cell early last Sunday, following his arrest for "allegedly insulting a white woman. The "insult" supposedly lay in Woods' calling out "Hy, honey," but even the remark has not been confirmed.

"We have found nothing for sure at all," Sheriff M. H. Bowman said.

MacArthur Woods, 71, father of the missing man, said on return from protective custody at Ocala, Fla., that the family had received no word from his son.

"I believed they killed him," the elderly farm worker declared sorrowfully, on reaching his residence in a Negro settlement four miles from Wildwood. "I'm afraid they've

One American correspondent said a trip through western Hungary revealed that there was no sign of either the Soviet or Hungarian Communists.

In Győr, he said a national council has presented a list of demands to Premier Nagy in Budapest but its members claim no connection with other councils except to share a common purpose.

In Tata, a village in the great mining area of Tatabánya, there was said to be no government at all.

A national council, he reported is running Magyarsó.
