Weekly paper of the Workers Socialist League * No. 86 February 8, 1978

Page under ascism Inside glass

Convenors back speed-up Tunisian general strike... .Back page

The calculated decision by Margaret Thatcher and the Tory leadership to whip up a racialist frenzy against coloured immigration is far more than just a squalid vote-catching far more squalid exercise.

It is a determined bid for a reactionary power base from which a re-elected Tory government intends to launch an all out confrontation with the trade unions.

Cashing in

Racialism is only being used as a convenient lever to win an audience for the policies of the extreme right wing Thatcher leadership.

To do this, the Tories are cynically cashing in on the conditions of falling living standards, chronic mass unemployment, slashed social services and housing shortages caused by the reactionary policies of the Lib-Lab coalition government.

Like the National Front they are using the frustration provoked by these conditions among layers of backward workers and within the middle class to step up their racialist, anti-socialist, anti-

Polarisation

The Tories know it is not enough to win the next election. They need to prepare conditions of violent polarisation within society in order to press home their attacks on a powerful working class movement.

Determined strikes, indicating unmistakeably that working class militancy on wages and conditions is far from spent despite the defeat of the firemen's strike, have forced a breach in the government's policy of sanctions to uphold the 10% pay limit.

PHOTO: Chris Davies, Report

These conditions have clearly decided the Tories that they must bring to an end the prolonged period in which they have ruled through the Labour and TUC leaders, and go for power in their own name.

Vicious attack

This is why Thatcher, in calling last weekend for an October election, was setting the scene for an election campaign unlike any in the postwar period.

Her speech showed the real meaning of the offensive on immigration. It launched a vicious witch-hunting attack on socialist policies—even alleging that Labour's wretched coalition programme is merely a 'front' for left wing policies.

This hysteria, linked with the propaganda on immigration, will connect up completely with the fascist agitation and violent attacks carried out by the National Front.

Thatcher's pretense that she is challenging to win the support of those who currently vote National Front is a patent fraud.

Added respectability

Thatcher's line will only enhance the standing of the NF and give them an added respectability among the middle class.

Her fanatically racialist

Her fanatically racialist talk of "swamping" the "British character" with "vast numbers" of immigrants "coming in indefinitely" is aimed at the same audience and flows from the same motives as NF propaganda.

Both movements reflect the desperation of the crisis-ridden capitalist class that sees a militant united labour movement as an obstacle to their exploitation of the working class.

The Tories know that in fanning the flames of nationalism and racialism they face no real opposition from the Labour leaders.

Chancellor Healey, stannachly defending the lin-

Chancellor Healey, staunchly defending the Lib-Lab coalition's reactionary policies—including a vicous battery of existing immigration laws—lamely accused Thatcher of "going for the Alf Garnett vote".

Rights restricted

Alex Lyon, 'left' chairman of the Labour Party Race Relations Action Group revealed that Labour's policies as they stand will drastically restrict the right of immigration in future without the need for tougher measures.

In other words the Labour Party's 'human' racialism is supposedly better than the

Nationalist call

United struggle

common enemy—the employers, whose lust for profit in a decaying and brutal social order drives them now into renewed attacks on the working class.

We stand clearly for the right of every worker to live and work in the country he or she chooses. We oppose all immigration laws, "quotas" and discriminatory legislation

The labour movement must close ranks against the Tory and NF racists and organise workers defence squads to repel fascist attacks.

The Lib-Lab coalition—completely wedded to capitalist policies and racist legislation—must be broken, along with its 10% pay limit.

In the active struggle for this development workers can be shown the need to fight for a socialist answer to the problems on which racialism festers:

*No sackings! Work sharing on full pay.

*Create new jobs! For a programme of useful public works under trade union control.

*Restore the social services! For a cash injection, with automatic compensation for inflation, under workers management.

*Nationalise the major industries! For a planned socialist economy.

Tories' naked racialism.
Tribunite MP Sydney
Bidwell announced in Parliament that:
"I do not regard Mrs
Thatcher as a racialist but as an extremely muddled woman on this question".

As a supporter of Tribune's policies Bidwell of course subscribes to the nationalist call for the imposition of import controls—discriminatory measures by British capitalism to "protect" British industry by forcing closures and redundancies in other countries.

Such a policy, attempting to line up British workers with their "own" bosses against "foreign" competition goes a long way towards the racist notion that it is 'nation' and not class that is the real dividing line.

Meanwhile violent fascist and racist attacks on black workers and youth continue to escalate and the NF continue to stage meetings under massive police protection

Workers can only defend jobs, wages and living standards in the most determined united struggle against the

300 bages OPTOV

The programme of Mario Soares' new right-wing Socialist-Christian Democratic coalition Democratic coalition government runs to 300

On every page is some new burden which is to be imposed on the workers and peasants.

Every page speaks clearly of the sordid history of betrayals which has brought supposed workers leader Soares to the head of a bourgeois coalition government, openly devoted only to one strategy—the rehabilitation of Portuguese capitalism and the protection of imperialists' interests.

Soares' own words make this as plain as it could be:

"It is important to talk [!] about socialism and socialist options but we must all agree that the building of Socialism is now less important than the economic recovery of the country if we are to save Portuguese democracy..."

"All the responsible politicians of this country more or less emphasised the necessity to reduce the balance of payments deficit, which is only viable through policies of austerity resulting in very high social costs that cannot be ignored..."

Sections of Soares' own party have reacted sharply to the coalition.

Former 'left' Agricultural Minister, Lopez Cardoso has seized the opportunity to unite his tiny breakaway section of the Socialist Party with other small organisations of 'left' opportunists to form the Union of the Democratic Socialist Left.

Christening

Present to give their blessing at the christening of this new opportunist block were both former darlings of the 'left' Major Otelo de Carvalho who played such a pernicious demagogic role in 1974 and 1975, and Major Melo Antunes, leader of the "Group of 9" army officers who in mid-1975 intervened at a crucial moment to try to head off the revolutionary movement of Portuguese workers.

ETHIOPIA

N BRIE

Refugees from Ethiopia report that 3,500 people have been killed in the purges of leftists carried out by the ruling military junta since Cuban and Russian advisors arrived four months ago. As the Derg continues its reign of terror, a counter-offensive is being launched with Cuban support to regain Ogaden from the Somali armies, and wrest territory from the liberation forces in Eritrea.

SCANDINAVIA

The continuing ravages of the capitalist crisis have been revealed in recent figures from northern Europe. Unemployment in both Denmark and Finland has reached 9%, while inflation in Finland soared to 13% last year. The Popular Front government has imposed a wages freeze, and the Norwegian government is expected to follow suit shortly after the introduction of its new battery of austerity measures.

IRELAND

The reflationary strategy of the Fianna Fail's last budget has been seriously threatened by the breakdown of talks with union leaders. The government's demand of a 5% limit on wage rises has been countered with claims for 12%, which would still lag far behind inflation. Lynch's government has replied with the fantastic argument that its budget measures would cut unemployment by half of its current 12%.

attempted to carry on with his balancing act, buffeted by strong cross-winds: he defended the demands of the strikers, but claimed that there was no quarrel with the DSP. are barely justified by the role of the Tunisian Communist Party which is now illegal and long ago dissolved itself into the left wing of the nationalists. Nor is there any evidence of any socialist organisation operating within the country. But the hints of Libyan complicity are more substantial.

Achour himself recently visited the 40,000 Tunisian migrant workers in neighbouring Libya, and used the opportunity to issue a statement of support for the PLO which reached far beyond the cautious and compromised position of the Bourguiba government.

'Deviationism'

The government fulminated with accusations of 'deviationism', and infiltration by communist and ba'athist elements conspiring to subvert the loyal and innocent Tunisian workers. This produced sycophantic protestations of 'true patriotism' from some quarters, but did nothing to check the surge of solid opposition.

The UGTT leadership was left with no option but to call a general strike. On the day itself, as the strikers gathered for demonstrations in Tunis, Kairouan, Sfax and Sousse, the police moved in to blockade union offices and occupy positions in the central and industrial areas.

Fanned by provocation from agents and police, small incidents rapidly developed into major confrontations with the wrecking of buses to form barricades, and attempts to occupy or burn down government buildings.

To attack the first general strike since independence, the army was ordered in for its first major intervention into the class struggle. As this massive operation proceeded along its bloody course, some 200 workers were killed and hundreds more severely wounded.

Demonstrations in defence of the union throughout the major industrial centres became larger and more frequent, while weapons were being gathered in local head-quarters—clubs, iron-bars, Molotov cocktails and togas canisters.

Amid prenerican.

In the wake of the general strike and uprising, the Bourguiba government is now imposing a fierce regime of repression in Tunisia.

At least 1,000 arrests have now been made of workers and unemployed youth, including 11 of 13 executive committee members of the General Workers' Union of 1965 and lacking any independent political organisation, Tunisian workers were unable to resist these attacks and betrayals immediately.

Opposition to Bourguiba's government came from the student movement in the late 1960s, when riots were put down with energetic brutality and from liberal intellectuals more recently.

Limited rights

The latter clamoured for an end to the one-party system, and finally the government conceded some limited organisational rights to the Democratic Socialist Opposition Movement.

Led by Ahmed Mestiri and Hassib ben Amar, this group of liberal social-democrats publishes El Rai, which is about as oppositional as The Guardian in Britain.

But as the economic crisis deepened, the militancy of workers grew rapidly.

This movement was largely led by youth. Some 50% of the Tunisian population is under 20, and unemployment is here at its highest.

Sections of youth have been in the vanguard of all the recent mobilisations, challenging the government, union bureaucracy and now the army.

General Workers' Union (UGTT).

The state of emergency is still in force, with army units exercising a dusk-to-dawn curfew. For venturing criticism, the paper El Rai has been suspended.

With the aid of bribery and brute force, hysterical demonstrations of workers 'loyal' to the ruling Destour Socialist Party have been arranged by Mohamed Sayah and other party leaders.

Despite the determined efforts of Prime Minister Nouira's government to create a smokescreen of false information, it is now becoming possible to judge the scale of events on 26 January.

The general strike itself was the culmination of months of pressure and agitation.

(mines, railways, etc.), a series of strikes began against government wage control. Elements of the administration sought to control this development with the collaboration of the UGTT leadership.

But this soon became impracticable as Achour was driven by the pressure of his own members to make more uncompromising statements and the bourgeoisie recognised the need for direct Tahar Belkhodua, associated with the policy of conciliation was dismissed as Minister of the Interior, and the scene set for the recent battles.

In 1965 these tensions came out in the open, and Achour was arrested for his criticism of government policy. But in 1970 he was re-installed by the DSP as the union's secretary-general (Achour was a founding member of what was then the Neo-Destour Party under French colonial rule in 1934).

As the international crisis of capitalism bore down on underdeveloped economies with the greatest severity, Tunisian workers experienced constant inflation of prices and soaring unemployment.

Discontent

Last November, in strategic sections of industry (mines, railways, etc), a series of strikes began against

As long ago as August there were signs ir the publications of the UGTT that discontent among its rankand-file members was reaching a level that could not be ignored or contained.

Founded in 1944 by Ferhat Hached and Habib Achour, the UGTT was the trade union wing of the nationalist DSP.

After independence these links were continued and formalised, though in practice the union always maintained a degree of autonomy from the one-party state and their relationship has been problematic.

In 1965 these tensions

'Social pact' The wave of strikes pressed on. Gangs of thugs were hired by the DSP to ransack offices of the union and threaten leading

The government responded with 'austerity' programmes, and the UGTT leadership collaborated in preparing a 'social pact' of wage control.

Demoralised by the events

This position could satisfy neither side—nor could it be sustained for very long.

The secret

The secretary general's main concern was to secure the principal base from which he could reach out to grasp the succession to the dying President Bourguiba. He has now been shipwrecked and smashed by the tidal wave he hoped to ride to power.

200 killed

These actions have no parallel in Tunisian history, and amount to an insurrection. It is still not clear what forces have been responsible for giving this movement such political direction as it showed, but it is almost certain that the strikes and demonstrations were the result of spontaneous militancy rather than any conscious intervention. This was reflected in the confusion which characterised the demands raised by the workers, and the evident lack of organisation on the day of the general strike itself.

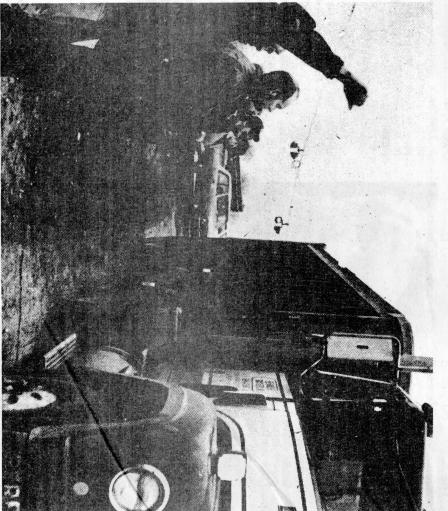

国と国民の国との Proposals for union of the two countries finally broke down after the Duerba talks in 1974, but the Gaddafi dictatorship has not lost all its enthusiasm for the project.

Significantly Mohamed Masmoudi has recently returned to Tunisia after four years exile.

The main proponent of the union plan, Masmoudi was dismissed as Foreign Minister after the discussions aborted. He and Achour are close political associates, and the Libyan connection is the second source of the secretary-general's influence.

These machinations within the bureaucracy of the state party offer no forward prospect to the Tunisian masses. Although the government seems to have succeeded in crushing the insurgency and preserving its power, this temporary defeat must form the basis of the future political development of the Tunisian workers and peasants.

Drawing the lessons from this conflict, they must now continue the fight to break the UGTT from the state apparatus completely, and begin to form an independent workers' party to struggle for their independent class interests.

Miner S smell success

Massive stocks piled up by US coal bosses and power stations before the nine week strike by United Mine Workers members are beginning to run out.

President Carter sent his Labour Secretary, Roy Marshall, to set up talks between the employers and the UMWA leaders to show the employers that the Government took their fears seriously union's history called to establish the right to local strikes and to defend the miners' health and welfare payments is clearly beginning to bite.

5

But as the bosses grow desperate so does the determination of UMWA President, Arnold Miller.

Miller has been trying to win acceptance in the union for abandoning the strike demand in return for guarantees on the health and welfare fund.

down scab pits must be stepped up and as the latest outbreak of shooting shows, defence squads must be strengthened.

The open collaboration

The open collaboration between the Democrats and the employers heightened by Marshall's intervention shows the clear need to break all links between the union and the bourgeois party they supported in the last election, and the need to build a Labour Party based directly on the organs of the working class.

WEN Z FOR HOPES

eneral

strike stands

British Foreign Secretary David Owen is the key figure in imperialism's efforts to bring Zimbabwe safely into the neo-colonial fold

Last week in Salisbury the signs were that Bishop Muzor-ewa, the Rev. Sithole and racist Premier Ian Smith were more or less reconciled to each other in spite of recent squabbles.

In Malta there also seemed to be a move towards reconciliation of Nkomo and Mugabe of the Patriotic Front and the imperialist representatives Owen and Andrew Young.

Nkomo and Mugabe agreed to support a role for imperialist (British and United Nations) troops in the proposed interim period.

Crucial concession

This is one more long step down the road of collabor-ation with imperialism which these leaders have been taking.

After the meeting, Mugabe (usually branded more left-wing than Nkomo) said that they had made progress towards an agreement "in which the British and ourselves will lead our country to independence".

The nationalists, he said, would play "a substantial role" and the British "a supervisory role".

In exchange for this crucial concession Owen and Young reportedly agreed to replacing their proposed interim military dictator (Field Marshall Lord Carver)

They have also tried to force some petrol distribution workers back to work at gunpoint.

by a broader dictatorial "governing council" on which the Patriotic Front would be represented.

Owen's problem is now to bring the Salisbury and Malta compromises together and he is using all the tricks of secret diplomacy to bring that about.

The Sunday Times reports that he used his friends in the racist South African government to transmit the document discussed in Malta to the "internal settlement" negotiators.

negotiators.

No doubt if all this treacherous, cunning and unprincipled attempt to scuttle the interests of the black masses of Zimbabwe get anywhere they will win Owen a reputation as a "bold and wise statemen"

But their chances of getting anywhere still constantly clash with the fact that the interests of the black masses and those of imperialism in Southern Africa are irreconcilable.

To build a stable neocolonial settlement in those conditions is like building a sandcastle when the tide is coming in. statesman".

But their week.

In the capital Managua and most of the provincial towns virtually all production and commercial activities have come to a halt as shops, factories and petrol stations have closed down.

The National Guard has so far remained loyal to the Somoza family, which is not surprising since that is where its money comes from.

The National Guard has attacked a number of demonstrations and six deaths as well as dozens of injuries have been reported.

They have also tried to force some petrol distribution workers Nicaragua's extraordinary "general strike" against the Somoza dictatorship has continued for a second full

But during the week the stoppage has spread rather than shrunk.

It seems fairly certain, however, that its character is changing.

To begin with the protest was sponsored by the bourgeois opposition to Somoza including the Higher Council of Private Enterprise (the bosses' organisation) and the class collaborationist alliance Democratic Liberation Union (UDEL).

Assassination

The origin of the protest was the assassination of the UDEL leader and newspaper editor Joaquin Chomorro.

The original demand was for no more than the bringing to justice of his assassins, assumed to be agents of Somoza.

Important as this issue was as a catalyst to the present strike it was only when the mass of the working class joined in that the most commonly raised slogan was for the resignation of Somoza.

But the leaders of UDEL and others who claim to lead this movement are simply rival capitalists to the vastly wealthy Somoza family.

For them, therefore, the continuation of the strike carries the danger that the workers will take it much further than these capitalist "strike leaders" intend.

That depends on whether the working class and peasantry can build a leadership based on a programme which represents their independent interests.

Reports give little sign of this development. Quite the contrary. The Communist Party is predictably in an unshakeable alliance with the bourgeois opposition of UDEL.

And it is also reported that the pro-Castro Sandinista Liberation Front, which staged dramatic attacks last week on pro-Somoza army posts, has also entered into an alliance with UDEL in order to get rid of the dictator.

S CRACKDOWN

Dictatorship is once again the solution of the bourgeoisie to the crisis it faces in south Asia.

Junous Jayewardene has now established himself as both head of state and head of government in Sri Lanka.

Jayewardene came to parliamentary power last year as leader of the United National Party.

Not acceptable

His amendments to the constitution now give him at least six years in office as President, and his government will no longer be accountable to the Assembly which he can dissolve at will.

The UNP won a landslide victory in July 1977 on the basis of its lavish promises to resolve the island's massive social and economic problems.

Murdered

The election was followed by protests from the Tamils (an ethnic minority in both Sri Lanka and southern India) against racial discrimination.

Their demands provoked a vicious reply: hundreds of Tamils were murdered in government-sponsored massacres.

But while he resists the Tamil movement for self-determination, Jayewardene himself is now proposing to create an independent statelet on the island—what he calls 'a capitalists' paradise', modelled on Hong Kong, that would be a magnet for foreign investment.

Not satisfied

This scheme goes alongside a wide-ranging attack on the Sri Lankan workers and peasants.

An 85% currency devaluation has resulted in a huge rise in prices, and welfare subsidies are being withdrawn.

Already about half the population has been denied the free rice ration in a period where unemployment means near starvation, and the rate of unemployment has reached 20%.

the government's investment plans. 'new employment'

But these measures have not nearly satisfied the IMF, which requires an end to subsidies on wheat and transport before it will grant a loan for the Soweto rebellion to the point where the workers face a new sharper level of state reaction without the only weapon which can defend them—independent organisation and programme.

Standing at that political crossroads the working class, in the struggle to preserve its independent interests, is increasingly vulnerable to state repression and the schemes of the reformists.

No shortage

There is no shortage of opportunists standing in the way of the working class.

One of the most important is Chief Buthelezi, leader of the legal Imkatha movement who swings between left and right in his cynical attempt to ride to power on the backs of South African workers.

His recently announced alliance with fellow collaborators in the Coloured Labour Party, brought into life with a wave of radical rhetoric, is not an attempt to forge genuine working class unity but a further attempt to shackle the workers firmly to a petty-bourgeois leadership.

The Soweto movement saw broad sections of the traditional nationalist movements and forging a fighting unity.

As opportunists in Zimbabwe plot betrayals of the black masses similar developments are taking place in Namibia and South Africa.

In Namibia the strategy of imperialism is to create a false independence, securing its interests through a friendly government.

are genuinely committed to the interests of the Namibian workers and peasants in their struggle to withstand the pressure now being orches-trated by imperialism.

Desperate attempts focus on the role of Foreign Secretary David Owen who is travelling the world hatching secret deals with 'moderate' Black leaders.

The demand 'No secret diplomacy' must be carried, systematically into the British workers movement as part of the fight for the breaking of the coalition and the fight for a new leadership which will start from the interests of the workers not of the moreighted.

Substitute

But this was achieved without the political leadership necessary to defend and develop the struggle through building on that unity.

In true opportunist fashion Buthelezi now emerges from the gutter of his capitulation and betryaals during the Soweto events and will start from the interests of the workers not of imperialism.

Such solidarity, however, can be no substitue for the building of a genuinely revolutionary organisation—the only measure which can defend the interests of the workers and peasants of Southern Africa.

In South Africa itself, the struggle has developed from government.

Meetings (planned for New York, February 11 and 12) between South Africa, the Big Five' imperialist countries and SWAPO are nothing more than attempts to force SWAPO to accept an imperialist solution.

There must be a fight in the British Labour Movement for maximum moral and material support to any forces within SWAPO which

Just as in Britain the Callaghan government plots against the British workers, it plays a major role internationally in imperialism's desperate attempts to head off the mass struggle in Namibia.

British workers must combine their opposition to wage cutting, unemployment and cuts in social services with a campaign in support of their class brothers and sisters in Southern Africa.

At present the central solidarity demand must seeks to present his alliance of petty-bourgeois collaborators as a substitute for the consolidation of the unity of the working class as an independent force.

Capital's agent

By substituting his new alliance of collaboration for the independence of the class Buthelezi once again exposes his real role as capital's agent in the attempt to demobilise and fragment the working class as an independent force. Opportunist collaborators will continue to owe their political life to their usefulness to capital on the one hand and the failure of the traditional nationalist movement to develop a revolutionary alternative on the tionary alternative on the other.

The political dilemma facing the working class in South Africa now demands

It demands that working class militants inside all the organisations whose bank-ruptcy has led to the current vulnerability of the working class, break decisively with the political line of collaboration, compromise and popular frontism and regroup around an alternative revolutionary programme of transitional demands based on the independence of the working class.

Such a regrouping is an essential aspect of the building of the genuinely revolutionary organisation which alone can defend the working class against the state offensive through the consolidation of the gains of Soweto and the development of the struggle to the only resolution in the interests of the working class—the establishment of socialism.

Jayewardene claims that this strategy will create new employment. But its populist propaganda barely conceals the truth that the UNP, like the Indian Congress Party, is the agent of the landowning and industrial capitalists.

Jayewardene has already moved to suppress opposition to his dictatorship and its policies. Trade union leaders have been removed from office, all demonstrations banned and political strikes threatened with severe recrimination.

Editor John Lister examines the record of 'Socialist Press' over the past year.

strike; the Lib-Lab Coalition; mass picketing of Grunwick; the rejection of a formal Phase 3; the imposition of the 10% pay limit; the firemen's strike—scabbed on by the army and the TUC; and the sell-out of the miners £135 pay claim. Internationally, there were major developments in Southern Africa and the spread of Popular Front type governments throughout Europe.

And it was the year in which Socialist Press, the only paper to have consistently analysed and provided programme and perspective in the course of these upheavals, acquired the material and political resources to go from fortnightly to weekly publication, beginning last

The Third Anniversary of Socialist Press is for us an occasion both to look back on the record established by the paper in the class struggle, and to work for further expansion and development of its sales and coverage.

Daily fight

From the very first edition of Socialist Press six weeks after the formation of the Workers Socialist League (from forces expelled from the Workers Revolutionary Party) the programme and policies we have put forward have drawn not on surface impressions of events, but on analysis of the experience of our members' daily fight for the Trotskyist programme within the working class.

This has made our paper different from any other left wing paper.

that has enabled Socialist Press to arrive at the correct analysis that the working class would not tamely submit to Phase 2 of wage control.

Coalition

It led us to forecast the explosion of militant struggles on pay that eventually took place in the first months of 1977 and brought the Leyland toolroom strike, and major struggles at Heathrow Airport and Port Talbot steelworks.

And while almost every other 'left' group took Callaghan at his word when he gave assurances that the Lib-Lab pact was simply a parliamentary arrangement, Socialist Press produced a special edition to ram home the fact that what was involved was an undeclared coalition to enforce a third phase of wage control.

Refuted

The opportunists and sceptics who doubted this analysis have been amply refuted by events.

Despite a summer period in which union conference after conference made it

been this strength

The Special issue Lib-Lab coalition - on the impossible for the TUC to endorse a formal Phase 3 of wage control, Chancellor Healey, in harness with Liberal leader Steel, unilaterally declared the imposition of a 10% limit on pay.

And it has been the refusal of the TUC leaders to challenge that limit, linked to solid parliamentary support on wage control from the Liberal Party and complete prostration from the spineless

First weekly Socialist Press

Labour 'lefts' that has preserved both the Callaghan-Healey government and state control of wages.

Only Socialist Press has consistently shown that the government policies of wage-cutting, mass unemployment and social service cuts can only be defeated through a fight which will break the Lib-Lab coalition and remove its cales-collaborating supporters in the unions and PHOTO: Andrew Wiard (Report)

1 These struggles take place as part of the international struggles of the working class for its political independence and against capitalist and imperialist exploitation.

Socialist Press has closely followed the liberation struggles in Southern Africa, the fight against Franco's heirs in Spain, the battle against vicious dictatorships in Latin America, and the age-old struggle for self-determination of the Irish people.

An eleven part series on Ireland has been a part of the theoretical and historical material presented in Socialist Press over the last year, which also included an important series on the rise of fascism in pre-war Europe.

Break from bosses

The emergence of new class collaborationist 'Popular Front' governments—comprising social democrats and

And in campaigning continually on the slogan "Regain and Defend Living Standards" we were able to expose and fight the manoeuvres by the union bureaucrats who throughout the summer attempted to create enough elbow room for the introduction of a formal Phase 3.

We spelt out the necessity for an end to all wage controls, for full catching up claims, and for agreements to include cost of living clauses to protect against inflation. firemen, allowing mass military strike breaking bigger than any time since 1926, in order to preserve the Lib-Lab coalition government. And we traced week-by-week the betrayals of the TUC leaders who consciously isolated and betrayed the firemen allowing mass International struggle government.

And Socialist Press has carried series of articles analysing the "Euro-communist" parties and their leaders' adaptation to the capitalist class in their "own" countries.

Alongside this basic coverage we have waged a fight against the unprincipled drive for "Socialist Unity" which has led the self-styled "Trotskyists" of the International Marxist Group to formally abandon their party press and, more important, to drop any pretence of a fight for the principle of defence of the Soviet Union against imperialism. he open or tacit of the Communist has been analysed
ously with the nt demand, that the parties break from argeoisie and form a

Important year

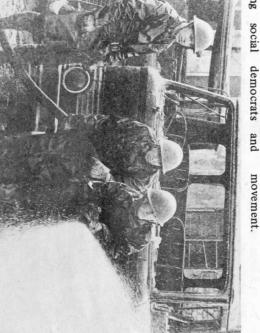

And we have exposed the ultra-left and opportunist posturing of the Socialist Workers Party which tailors its demands and actions not to workers' objective needs but to the prevailing mood of the working class.

The third year of Socialist Press has therefore been an active and an important one.

We urge every reader to play a role in ensuring that this work can be taken further in every field in our fourth year.

Take an extra copy of the paper to sell at work or to a friend. Give a donation—however small or large—to the Socialist Press Monthly Fund.

Give us the material basis to expand our work and improve the paper as the vehicle for the Trotskyist programme in the workers' movement

Troops scabbing on firemen's strike - by permission

A NUPE steward at the Westminster told Socialist Press that pressure on the casualty department had increased since the closure of the Casualty Department at the nearby St. Georges hospital: and the closure of 39

hospital's Casualty Department.

The porter Mr. Loreto Galano, aged 35, had been sick since the previous week and on Tuesday was taken

Fighting the cuts in London – marchers protest at closure of Bethnal Green Hospital.

NUPE members at the Westminster Hospital in London walked out last London walked out last Tuesday after a porter was left to die in the hospital's Casualty again until he commented in the closure of Bethnal Green Hospital.

NUPE members at the into the Casualty by two fell the commented in the casualty again until he commented in the closure of Bethnal Green Hospital.

Not active

And the inquiry must not stop at the Westminster Hospital, but must include the Regional Health Autho-

low pay Taxmen fight

In an act of class solidarity with low paid home workers, the 64,000 strong Inland Revenue Staff Federation have refused to handle 1978-9 tax return forms until home workers receive adequate rates for their menial tasks.

Currently, home workers are employed by the government to put tax-change slips into Inland Revenue return envelopes, an onerous, repetitive chore which the government feels it can farm out with impunity to the lowest paid section of the working class.

At the moment, home workers receive 25p for every 600 forms they put in envelopes, an hourly rate of roughtly 12½p.

The Inland Revenue Staff Federation's action—unprecedented among Civil Service workers—is an important step forward for the largely immigrant, largely female home workers whose conditions of envelope the conditions of envelope the conditions of the largely female home workers whose conditions of envelope the conditions of envelope the conditions of the conditio of

into the Casualty Department by two fellow NUPE members at about 10 am. Apart from a cursory examination at 11 o clock, Mr. Galano was not seen again until he collapsed and died at 1.00 pm. When his fiancee, who also works at the hospital asked about his condition at 1.30 pm., she was told she HOSPIT/ NEED WE OUR Friends and colleagues of Mr. Galano were only allowed to see his body after a wrangle with the hospital. Over 200 NUPE members voted in a mass meeting to support by a series of lightning strikes, the call of NUPE branch secretary Jamie Morris for an inquiry by the Regional Health Authority into Mr. Galano's death, and a further inquiry into the running of the hospital. This tragic case has highlighted once again the effects the cuts are having on the London area. A NUPE steward at the Westminster told Socialist Press that pressure on the casualty department had would have to wait, and was not told of his death until an hour and a half later. Mass meeting part of the Westminster Group, had meant it was more difficult to find beds for patients who needed to be admitted urgently from Casualty. Since it is cuts like this which are the cause of Mr. Galano's death, it is worthless to ask the Regional Health Authority to hold an inquiry: it is they who drew up the plan to close 150 of Londons hospitals. The only people capable of carrying out an inquiry into Mr. Galano's death and the workings of the Westminster Hospital are the NUPE members themselves, in conjunction with other hospital unions in London. Worthless In spite of that workers in hospitals as far away as the Royal Free in Camden have staged lightning strikes and pledged support for the Westminster NUPE branch. NUPE members at the Westminster who seriously wish to fight the conditions which led to their colleague's death must force their stewards to build joint committees with other unions in their Area and to affiliate to CLASH, the all-London stewards organisation set-up to fight for united action against NHS cuts. rity and the DHSS itself. In the past, Jamie Morris has not been active in building joint action with other unions and other hospitals to fight the cuts. Build committees

PHOTO: Mark Rusher (IFL)

recommend Martin Williams, an unemployed Irish worker, for deportation after being convicted of ordering a meal he could not pay for, has sparked an angry e decision by Acton to Irish workers resident in Britain leafletted the court hearing denouncing the way the law discriminates against Irish people, hanging the continued threat of deportation over their heads.

This is not only true of the obviously anti-Irish "Prevention of Terrorism" Act, aimed at intimidating and suppressing Irish militants, but can be activated by even the most trivial criminal court conviction.

Such treatment is clearly discriminatory. And Tory spokesman on Ireland Airey Neave has launched a campaign to increase this discrimination against Irish workers if Irish Prime Minister Lynch does not stop his opportunist talk of a united Ireland.

Neave has called for a retaliatory crackdown on social security entitlements, passports and democratic rights for Irish people resident in Britain.

confuse names

laws.

The challenge laid down by this group of Irish workers must be taken up, and the signatories of the 'call' must take responsibility for carrying a serious campaign on the issue into the Labour Party and the trade union

And other elements in the party are also apparently blaming the CLV—which includes such diehard opponents of socialism as Shirley Williams, William Rodgers and John Cartwright—for the legal wrangles initiated by Lewis and McCormick.

ries

The laughably-named right wing front organisation 'Campaign for Labour Victory' has run into a problem of mistaken identities. Reactionary elements in the Labour Party looking for sympathetic crypto-Tory groupings are apparently confusing the CLV with the equally despicable 'Campaign for Representative Democracy' run by Newham infiltrators Julian Lewis and Paul McCormick. Legal wrangles The CLV newssheet emptily assures its true-blue readers that: "Although both campaigns are centred in Oxford, they have nothing to do with each other. And we have no intention of changing that". Both campaigns however, are aimed at nothing more than removing or suppressing militants and socialist policies within the Labour Party. Those Labour Party members who see the party as a means of achieving socialist policies would be well advised to consider the best ways and means of driving those twin crypto-Tory groupings and their coven of admirers out of the Party. Of course the CLV is unable to point to any material difference between their Tory policies and those of their rivals. True blue ardes Labour MPs were given answers to questions in parliament this week which should put them on the spot. Both of them were enquiring about jobs. One was the Tribune group's economic "expert", Brian Sedgemore who is a member of the Commons Committee that last week quizzed a Senior Treasury economist, Frank Cassell, on the official government forecasts for jobs. In response to Sedgemore's questions, Cassell revealed that even if the economy grew by 3½% a year between now and 1982—considerably in excess of anything achieved by British capitalism this century—then unemployment would still remain well over a million at the end of that period. Indeed fearsome possibilities exist in the world capitalist economy today which make even the Treasury's figures look optimistic. These are most visible in the development of trade war between the capitalist countries, taking the form of protective duties, competitive devaluations and various kinds of export subsidy. A new study has just been Of course, these same esti-mates imply that the continuation of the recent overall stagnation of production in British capitalism is bound to lead to mounting mass unemployment which by 1982 could reach three million, the peak figure of the 1930s. That means the government is admitting that, even if the British economy fulfilled its most optimistic expectations, hundreds of thousands of workers have been consciously sentenced by the government to unemployment for life. Of course, these same estimates Sentenced

Aursery fight

BLOODY SUNDAY DERRY 1972 rkers on the Sin

A well-attended meeting last week in Oxford's Town Hall discussed action against the closures of first, middle and nursery schools by the Tory County recent campaign to "support our children" and defend pupil-teacher ratios which was being supported by parents.

Members of the Oxford City Nursery Campaign asked the meeting to support their five point policy which includes defence of nursery schools and classes through occupation, and the setting up of committees of parents, teachers and other trade unionists to investigate the finances of the Council.

Discussion on the policy of occupation exposed worries about the Criminal Trespass Act, and some people felt that while direct action will inevitably be necessary, "we shouldn't publicise our intentions to the Council".

An amendment to delete the occupation clause was successful by 31 votes to 30.

Speakers from the threatened schools, an NUT member and a Trades Council delegate spoke about the steamrolling tactics of the Council, lack of parental consultation and the maction of union and Labour Party leaders on the subject of closures closures.

The meeting agreed to send a letter to NUT Divisional Committee members condemning their recent decision to accept school closures on the grounds of a national drop in school-age population, and reminding the NUT of their

The chorus of praise that greeted Michael Edwardes' speech last week to an assorted mixture of managers, class collaborators and shop stewards had been a long time brewing.

The Edwardes plan, half formed, vague and inadequate for the problems of capitalism though it is, marks a turn from the policies of Lord Ryder, a decided shift in the direction of confrontation.

Since Leyland has been the whipping post for Fleet Street for years the press was guaranteed to hail any move towards an attack on the workers.

The Daily Mail hailed it:

"Bravo to the new boom

. Union leaders cheer as Leyland lays it on the line".

Focusing on the grovelling reaction from Communist Party and right wing collaborators, the Mail posed the question for Leyland in the following form:

"Can the shop stewards control their membership, sell them the idea of redundancies, and help management restore the notion of a fair day's work for a fair day's pay".

But behind the razzmattaz of the Mail and other populist papers lies a deeper unease based on the knowledge that what is crippling Leyland is a crisis of capitalism far deeper than promises of good behaviour can cure.

The Financial Times, noting in its news page that Edwardes' reception was certainly no warmer than that given to Lord Ryder, two years ago, nevertheless echoed the Daily Mail's focus in an editorial headed 'New boom at Leyland'.

Beneath the heading, however, the text took a different turn.

What the FT understands (but obviously cannot openly state) is that no policy for Leyland short of closure can cure its ills under capitalism. The populist option of closing volume car production is not on.

The Financial Times says:

"To abandon volume cars at this stage is hardly feasible. Quite apart from the political objections, it is extremely doubtful whether Jaguar, Rover and Triumph are viable on their own. They depend for bodies and other components on factories whose main volume comes from Austin Morris; if Austin Morris disappeared, the economics of those factories would be undermined...

"The present system of making cash injections vaguely dependent on good behaviour is unsatisfactory. In the financial reconstruction which seems likely in the near future the cardinal principle must be to put responsibility for Leyland's future where it belongs—with the people who manage the company and work in it.

"To the extent that they are unable to generate funds out of their own operations, a further contradiction must take place—and this, too, is a matter for management to decide."

In other words, the Financial Times is hoping that 'political considerations' (i.e. working class resistance) will disappear in a cloud of management decisions.

To achieve that capitalism will require more than a new boom.

They will require to stamp out all opposition to closures . . . a task beyond even the considerable powers of Derek Robinson, Terry Duffy and the other collaborators at the Kenilworth meeting.

dole

published by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) which describes in detail the spread of protectionism in the last few years of capitalist crisis.

So far protectionism is concentrated in four industries—textiles and shoes, steel, shipbuilding, and miscellaneous engineering (especially TV tubes).

Rationality'

GATT's report is opposed to protectionism from the standpoint of capitalist 'rationality' on a world scale.

But the report (entitled Trade Liberation, Protectionism and Interdependence) is useful in showing the spread of protectionism and emphasising the elementary point that protectionism can only 'save jobs' at the expense of destroying jobs somewhere else in the capitalist system.

This elementary fact raises an important question of principle for the Labour movement.

Proletarian internationalism demands the firmest possible fight against any chauvinistic 'solutions' to the problems of unemployment.

Better strategy

Aside from import controls the other panacea of the Tribun ites for solving the economic crisis, is a better "industria strategy" by which they mear more power to that rescue squar for the capitalist class, the National Enterprise Board.

In an effort to prove that the government's use of the NEB is inadequate, Jeff Rooker, another Tribunite MP also last week go hold of some interesting information in the House of Commons.

Commons.

In reply to a question from Rooker the government issued detailed information about the changes in production and jobs in various British industries since 1975 (roughly the life of Tribune's cherished NEB).

These figures show that over these two years the loss of jobs has been greatest in the following industries: ferrous foundries, office machinery, process plants fabrication and constructional equipment, and artificial fibres.

They also show a number of industries where production fell relative to employment and which are therefore, likely to be key striking points in the capitalists' latest offensive against jobs.

These danger point industries include machine tools, industrial engineer textile machinery, mechanical handling equipment and industrial trucks, telecommunications equipment and man-made fibres.

This kind of information can be an important acquisition for socialists since it can enable a socialist leadership to understand better the inter-connected manifestations of the capitalist crisis. It opens the possibility of adjusting tactics in the workers' fight against the effects of the crisis and for the social overthrow of the capitalist system which produces it.

In the hands of the Tribunites who have obtained it, however, information like any other potential weapon of the class struggle is unloaded, made harmless and used as the basis for one of their unprincipled class collaborationist schemes.

By John Lister and Enrique Alvares

In last week's 'Socialist Press' we examined the theoretical positions argued by leaders of the Spanish and Italian Communist Parties. In this article we intend to look at some much more recent pronouncements by spokesmen of these self-styled "Eurocommunist" parties.

These show even more clearly the way in which the "new" phenomenon of "Eurocommunism" is in reality the extension of the Stalinist perspective of "socialism in one country" and "peaceful coexistence" with capitalism, under conditions where the Communist Party leadership comes under acute pressure.

Open collaboration

The critical weakness of the capitalist class and its state regime in these countries and the revolutionary potential of the working class have forced the Stalinist leaders—determined at all costs to preserve the status quo of class relations on which their bureaucratic existence is based—into new levels of open class collaboration in which the Communist Parties' traditional links to Moscow have been called into question.

question.

The results have been dramatic. In Spain alone, over the last year the Communist Party has:

*denounced proletarian internationalism.

*denounced the dictator-ship of the proletariat.

*scabbed on strikes and demonstrations.

*praised the "democratic" Francoist regime.

*lauded the Francoist

army.

*adopted the flag of the Francoist monarchy as its own.

*defended the institution of the monarchy.

*supported American bases in Spain.

*signed the anti-working class Moncloa Pact with the Francoist regime.

*expelled one of its members who killed a fascist in self defence.

Its leader, Santiago

Carrillo, has:

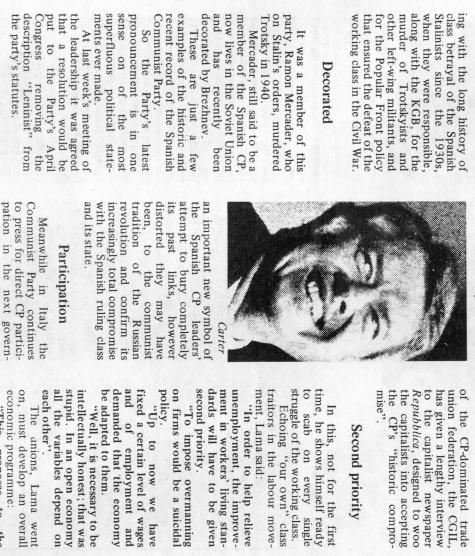

*appeared on public platforms with fascists like Manuel Fraga.

*sent condolences to the Francoist police when some of them were killed.

*crossed a strike picket line in the United States.
All of this is only in keep-

The Party is to call itself "revolutionary Marxist"—a phrase which it manages to invest with such a melifluous sound that even the most savage bourgeois breast would be soothed.

Politically redundant as it may seem, this new move is an important new symbol of the Spanish CP leaders' attempt to bury completely its past links, however distorted they may have been, to the communist tradition of the Russian revolution and confirm its increasingly total compromise with the Spanish ruling class and its state.

Participation

Meanwhile in Italy the Communist Party continues to press for direct CP participation in the next government.

This call for a grand coalition follows on years of loyal support for Christian Democratic governments, and connects with a willingness to slash workers jobs and living standards in the name of "solving" the crisis of Italian capitalism.

These positions of the Spanish and Italian CPs were illustrated in more detail in a discussion programme, Analysis, on BBC Radio 4, two weeks ago, in which Spanish CC member Manuel Ascarate and Italian economics spokesman Giorgio Napolitano took part.

The strange cross-breed of Stalinist, social-democratic and bourgeois rhetoric that expresses the reactionary views of these "Eurocommunists" was well demonstrated by Ascarate:

"We are an independent party, absolutely independent of the cause of peace, of the development of the fight of the people for their liberties, for the betterment of their conditions.

and speed up, the Governor of the Bank of Italy said, as well he might, that Lama's were "fine and courageous words"—a reaction shared by virtually the entire capitalist press.

A local union official in Turin commented:

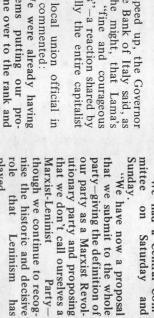

"We were already having problems putting our programme over to the rank and file; these declarations won't make the task any easier."

"And it is according to this criterion and basically according to the criterion of what must be the foreign policy of Spain that can contribute to international peace and a good settlement of problems that we fix our international policy.

"We had a Central Committee on Saturday and

MSIMINAD

Cross-breed

Second priority

In this, not for the first time, he shows himself ready to scab on every single struggle of the working class.

Echoing "our own" class traitors in the labour movement, Lama said:

"In order to help relieve unemployment, the improvement in workers' living standards will have to be given second priority.

"To impose overmanning on firms would be a suicidal policy.

"Up to now we have fixed a certain level of wages and of employment and demanded that the economy be adapted to them.

"Well, it is necessary to be intellectually honest; that was stupid. In an open economy all the variables depend on each other".

The unions, Lama went on, must develop an overall economic programme:

"This proposes to the workers a policy of sacrifices —not marginal but substantial sacrifices".

While growing numbers of workers expressed their bitter hostility to this open invitation to sackings, wage cuts

"This change means from the organisational point of view not that we abandon democratic centralism, because we think that practically every party needs a certain degree of centralism. "What we are beginning to do now that we are a legal party and the new statutes that are proposed for our Congress put this very clearly will be elected by secret votes and all the results will be announced.

Anathema

ittee, in the Central Com-ee, when we discussed article about

Such "openness" of course is designed not to open up CP ranks to discussion on a revolutionary programme, which remains anathema to the Stalinist leadership, but to appease bourgeois public opinion.

"Usually now in our CC (and not to say in the provincial committees and so on) it is very frequent that there are votes against and abstentions.

We work on the basis of majority rule and free discussion of all the opinions and decisions that are made in the party".

Napolitano pointed out that the Italian CP has lost supporters to the left:

"We had very sharp discussions and we had conflicts. There were people who abandoned our party. There are people who are now for instance in some extreme left groups who were in the past secretaries of federations or something like this this.

"For instance there was a secretary of the Milan federation, one of the most important organisations of our party, who never accepted our condemnation of Stalinism and who is now in a small extreme left wing group.

"I mean we have had so many, so deep and so sharp disputes in our party on all these problems that it is absurd to say that only the leaders impose a certain strategic line on the militants

"Discussion"

But of course Napolitano knows that "discussion" within such a mass party without the intervention of a conscious alternative leadership cannot seriously threaten the worked-out positions pushed by the whole apparatus of the Central Committee pusned by the Central apparatus of the Central Committee.

The distance these CP leaders have travelled from even the semblance of a socialist programme was indicated when the discussion moved on to nationalisation. Ascarate announced:

"We believe that there economy. It will be a state sector that can have different forms related to regional and in the contract of the sector that can have different forms related to regional and in the call of the contract of the sector that can have different forms related to regional and the call of the c

"We believe that for this public sector in Spain the question of energy will be very important—a nationalised energy body that can co-ordinate all this policy.

"But at the same time we are in favour of keeping private initiative in a very broad part of the economy.

"In any case we strongly support the maintenance of private enterprise in what we call small and medium property, because in this sphere the experience has even shown that nationalisation or to create a state economy in these sectors hinders even the economic solution of the problem—it is going backwards in satisfying the needs of the people.

"They are questions that you cannot solve by a socialised economy and we believe it is necessary to keep the private enterprise and coexistence between the public sector and a sector of private initiative".

"Private initiative" of course is an arch-Tory pseudonym for capitalism. But if Ascarate speaks up for "small and medium" property, Napolitano went further still—opposing nationalisation of even the giant Fiat car monopoly:

"We think that in Italy the economic public sector is already big enough to influence the general development of the national and must not only be respected but concretely helped by the state.

"As far as the great private enterprises are concerned—beginning with Fiat, we have "We are convinced that the small and middle private enterprise is a fundamental pillar of the Italian economy and must not only be respected but the state.

no intentions to nationalise it, we do not think it is necessary for general reasons.

"We think on the contrary that the country requires a democratic flexible planning based on some essential guidelines.

"A few days ago according to recent opinion polls a good half of Italian private industrialists took a position in favour of a Communist participation in government".

A brief glance at these policies of the Italian CP make it clear why industrialists have such faith in them.

And while the US imperialists fret on the possible "dangers" to NATO, Napolitano points out that the CP has declared 100% for the Italian bourgeoisie and its allies, and against the Soviet Union!

"We made a very clear choice. We have no dilemma to face because we are loyal to our country and not to anybody else and we are loyal to the international alliances of our country.

"We don't ask for a unilateral withdrawal from NATO. A few months ago after a very important discussion a common statement on foreign policy was signed by all democratic parties—by our party, the Socialists and so on.

"I don't see what question could really arise. I don't think President Carter's worries are based on a serious knowledge of our policy".

Adaptation

workers.

A Trotskyist party in Italy or in Spain, beginning from a clear understanding that "Euro-communism" represents an adaptation by counter-revolutionary Stalinist leaders to the problems and needs of their "own" bourgeoisies, would certainly be able to win sections of advanced workers from these parties.

Only the Trotskyist programme offers an independent road for workers to take action in defence of their jobs, wages, and democratic rights, combined with the necessary understanding of the historical origins, evolution and role of Stalinism to enable workers to fight their bureaucratic leaders.

The building of parties based on the fight for that programme in practice is an urgent task in the mounting political and economic crisis

No dilemma

"Ten years ago it was predicted that the theory of socialism in one untry must inevitably lead to the growth of nationalist tendencies in sections of the Comintern. This prediction has become an obvious

"But until recently, the chauvinism of the French, British, Belgian, hoslovak, American, and other Communist parties seemed to be, to a certain extent was, a refracted image of the interests of Soviet macy ("the defence of the USSR"). Today, we can predict with ance the inception of a new stage.
"The growth of imperialist antagonisms, the obvious proximity of war danger and the equally obvious isolation of the USSR must oidably strengthen the centrifugal, nationalist tendencies within comintern. Each one of its sections will begin to evolve a patriotic "Stalin has reconciled the Communist parties of imperialist "Stalin has reconciled the Communist parties of imperialist democracies with their national bourgeoisies. This stage has now been passed. The Bonapartist procurer has played his role.

"Henceforth the Communo-chauvinists will have to worry about their own hides, whose interests by no means always coincide with the "defence of the USSR".

"When the American Browder deemed it possible to declare before a senate committee that in case of a war between the United States and the Soviet Union his party would be found on the side of its passionate-ly beloved fatherland, he himself might have possibly considered this statement as a simple strategem.

"But in reality, Browder's answer is an unmistakable symptom of a change from a "Moscow" to a "national" orientation. The "stratagem" arose out of the necessity of adaptation to imperialist "patriotsm".

"stratagem" arose out of the necessity or augusticitism".

"The cynical grossness of this stratagem (the turn from the "fatherland of the toilers" to the republic of the dollar) reveals the profound extent of degeneration that has occurred and the full extent of the dependence of the sections of the Comintern on the public opinion of the bourgeoisie".

"... In that imperialist country which happens to be in the same camp with the USSR during the war (if any such is found), the section of the ex-Comintern will, naturally, "defend" Moscow.

"This defence, however, will be of no great value, for in such a country all parties will "defend" the USSR. (In order not to compromise itself with its imperialist ally, Moscow would probably order the Communist Party not to shout too loudly, and might possibly try to dissolve it altogether).

"On the contrary, in countries of the hostile camp, i.e., precisely where Moscow will be in greatest need of defenders, the ex-Communist parties will be found completely on the side of their imperialist fatherland: this course will be infinitely less dangerous and far more profitable.

A review of 'Destiny' by David Edgar which shown on BBC 1 on Tuesday 31 January.

play David Edgar had obviously gone to great lengths to avoid simply stringing together a series of political speeches.

Within the obvious limits imposed by such a comprehensive subject there was clearly great effort to give the characters some depth.

After making the point that Powell's 1968 'Rivers of Blood' speech made racism respectable Destiny went on to trace the elements that go into British fascism today.

The central character, Turner (brilliantly portrayed by Colin Jeavons) returns from army service in India and sets up a small business in a Midlands town. being an ly 'political'
l Edgar had gone to great avoid simply must come together to "save the nation".

The TPL becomes part of the NF and Turner is selected as candidate for the coming by-election.

Two faced

During the course of the campaign the classic two faces of fascism were shown in the conflict between Maxwell, who wanted more emphasis on policies, such as opposition to wage control, which would appeal to the workers, and the old NF campaigner Cleaver, who wanted to leave himself more room for deals with the employers.

In this case Maxwell is 'purged' but it is important to draw out the fact that if fascism is to succeed it will indeed attempt to maintain this dual position right up to the point of power.

While its role is to defend capitalism, the fascist party needs to use 'socialist' rhetoric to succeed.

The 'anti-monopoly'

As a supporter of the british Empire' he finds his orld gradually crumbling, tore and more immigrant ices appearing in the town.

The final straw comes hen Metropolitan Trust uys up the whole street here his business is and he is Drawn to fascism

The 'anti-monopoly' Gregor Strasser wing of the Nazis, which was dominant in the SA and which took National Socialism at face value was purged only after Hitler had used it to gain a base amongst backward workers and power in the state

He sets up the Taddley Patriotic League (TPL) and the play uses a public meeting of the League, addressed by David Maxwell from 'Nation Forward' (NF) to show how people are drawn towards fascism.

A young housewife married to a reactionary lecturer complains about her husband's 'anti patriotic' colleagues, black students who 'don't work' and the fact that her house has become unsaleable because of her black neighbours.

A middle-aged Tory woman says that all the views she has held dear for 30 years seem to be losing ground.

ground.

Her attack on the unions brings a response from a white working class trade unionist who feels that he too is under threat—this time from the growing proportion of blacks in his factory.

The final element in the meeting is a young unemployed worker who sees no prospect of getting a job.

Desperation draws all these people to the meeting and their attitude is cleverly summed-up by NF member Maxwell in the phrase 'fings ain't wot they used to be'.

He goes on to argue that despite class differences they have more in common—they

When he succomplaining let Labour voters starts letters rs he getting

'Left' Labour

The owner of Metropoli-Trust, the source of ner's ruin, is named Good-n-clearly a Jew.

The way reformism is in meeting the fascis is shown by the 'l' candidate who supports black vistike against dis in a local factory. who black w ay in which is incapable of fascists head on the 'left' Labour who initially tible" with Marxism and simply turn one's back on Freudianism is too simple or, more accurately, too simplistic. But we are in any case not obliged to adopt Freudianism. It is a working hypothesis that can produce and undoubtedly does produce deductions and conjectures that proceed along the lines of materialist psychology. The experimental procedure [of Pablov] in due course will provide the tests for these conjectures. But we have no grounds and no right to put a ban on the other procedure, which, even though it may be less reliable, yet tries to anticipate the conclusions to which the experimental procedure is advancing only very slowly".

Culture and Socialism

Since Trotsky wrote this in 1926, a series of commentators and critics has attempted to reconcile, synthesise or variously combine Marxism and Freudian neycho-analysis

By Keith White

as de Beauvoir, Fromm Marcuse, Mitchell, Reich

crudities and shabby journalism.
Comrades should not be deceived by the intriguing title of Ann Foreman's book into expecting a work that is stimulating or challenging.
Sadly, it has neither of these qualities: it is rarely interesting, and never important.
Foreman marshalls her forces with all the self-absorbed confidence of the eclectic.
Marx and Freud are rolled out to the front, to be flanked by such Marxists as de Beauvoir, Fromm, Marxists as de Beauvoir, Fromm, Lukacs, Marcuse, Mitchell, Reich

Backed with this imposing regiment, she launches random forays into history and literature, but captures only a miserable handful of well-worn weapons that she then deploys with neither strength nor accuracy.

There is little point in analysing this work. Its conclusions amount to little more than a claim that the women's movement could humanise the revolutionary workers' movement by transforming the "traditional form, content and limited location of political struggle",

Where these proposals assume any clarity, they advocate the old familiar concept of an 'autonomous' women's movement—a mystical concept beloved of self-

By David Whitfield

Random forays

It requires more than goodwill and energy to place the partial gains of psycho-analysis at the service of the working class in its historic task of reconstructing society on a socialist basis. And the value these gains could hold should not be under estimated.

A deeper understanding of the complex process by which ideology is reproduced within individual members of bourgeois society, can enable revolutionaries to combat all its reactionary features far more sharply whereever they appear as sexism, racism or any of the multiple forms of chauvinism. But Femininity as Allenation does nothing to advance that development, except in one respect.

Foreman argues that provision for a dependent wife, working in the home, came to be included in the wages for the skilled male workers, who formed the aristocracy of labour in British industry of the late 19 century.

Although it is based here in a bizarre and confused misunderstanding of the valve of labour power, this approach certainly opens the possibility of a far more thorough analysis of the ways in which the oppression of women has been structured within the working class.

This volume might have some limited value in encouraging readers to move on to Marx or Freud themselves. But the time and cash required for this book could be far better spent on the works of almost any other writer cited in its pages.

conspiracy".

Rothschild, Marx, Luxembourg, Trotsky were Jews he declares—so financ capitalism and communism are all part of the same plot.

When a confused Turner protests that he is not antisemitic Cleaver delivers the state.

Edgar skillfully portrays the way Turner is manipulated by the hard-core Nazis.
In one scene we see him being coached through his speech, and watch Cleaver draw out the importance of the "world Jewish he is asked to defend an 'illegal' immigrant.

Although he claims to oppose the 1971 Immigration Act, he refuses to defend those who have "broken the law".

"Joint stand"

The immigrant workers turn away from him in disgust.

The Tory candidate, from the Heath wing of the party, revolted by the NF, approaches the Labour candidate for a "joint stand".

This offer is rejected.

When the result is declared he makes a gesture by refusing to shake Turner's hand but has nothing else to offer in the fight against fascism.

The way in which the employers are drawn towards the fascists is shown when the NF are called in to break the Asian picket line.

friend of the Tory candidate. We see him at first ridiculing the ideas on military rule put by Lewis Rolfe, a right wing Tory.

But when the chips are down, the employer uses the NF to defend his profits.

In the final stages of the play he and Rolfe meet Cleaver and Turner to discuss more long term co-operation. With 23% of the vote in the election and the attack on the picket line behind them the fascists have shown the employers they have someemployers th thing to offer. they shown have

Relationship

The employers won't produce financial support straight away but want a continuing relationship.

The attitude of the employer to fascism is summed up neatly when he says "one doesn't like the dentist but perhaps to save a tooth...".

In this final scene as Turner and Cleaver discuss with the employer and Lewis Rolfe it emerges that Rolfe's company is Metropolitan Trust.

Turner is shattered to find he is being used by people who ruined him. He breaks from the fascists.

important point to draw out of the play is that it avoided a common attitude on the left that the white working class is being swept away on the fascist itde.

A white worker on strike alongside the immigrant workers appeals for forces to help the picket. He explains that it is necessary to stand together on a class basis.

David Edgar's play is a weapon in the struggle to build such a working class opposition to fascism.

Weakness

READERS' LETTERS
Letters from readers
in response to articles contained in Socialist Press or on other topics are welcome.
They should, however,
be kept as brief as possible. Write to Socialist Press, 31,
Dartmouth Park Hill

A weakness in the play was that there was no treatment of Labour's role in paving the way for Fascism by refusing to provide a socialist answer to the crisis.

This could have been done in the scene where fascist and socialist confront each other in the prison cell.

While the point made at the end as to the necessity of crushing fascism in the cradle is clearly correct and a central focus in the anti-fascist fight the exclusion of any suggestion of the need for policies to answer the effects of capitalism's crisis detracts from the political strengths in the play.

Finally, perhaps the most

Labour government, and rising working class hostility to the Phase 2 pay limits, in particular from the end of 1976, created the general conditions in which compulsory question of councils of revolutionaries again needed to look at the emergence under wage

With the government hanging its whole existence on the perpetuation of wage control, and with the whole TUC apparatus throwing its weight in with Callaghan-Healey, a major challenge to the 5% Phase 2 limit inevitably meant a confrontation with the whole bureaucracy, raising the question of government.

Alternative

The WSL pointed out that should such a struggle erupt, the mood in the working class made it possible that a strike movement could quickly grow among other sections of workers, creating a situation similar to the May-June events in France in 1968.

Under these conditions we began to draw attention to the councils of action demand, in order to be able to offer workers an alternative leadership and organisation, independent of the TUC

This long-term perspective was confirmed by the rapid growth and implications of the Leyland toolroom strike which in March 1977 led to the brink of a national engineering strike against Leyland's sacking threat.

These events brought the downfall of the Labour government and the emergence of the Lib-Lab coalition, since when every key wages battle in defiance of government pay limits has implicitly included a threat to the very life of the government.

This was particularly true of the firemen's strike. As the 48,000 firemen went out, 1 million local authority workers were still pressing their claim for a 30% pay increase, and 250,000 miners were pursuing their demand for a £135 a week wage.

The fight to mobilise these workers on their pay claims alongside the firemen was essential if the pay policy was to be defeated in the public

But the official leaders of both sections were dedicated to preventing such united action—and were assisted in each case by the Stalinists.

The Workers Socialist League, therefore, combined the demand that these leaders call action with agitation on a local level for councils of action to be established, bringing together firemen and delegates from other union branches in order to broaden the action and mobilise these other sections.

While in Sheffield the Stalinist-led AUEW District Committee was able to ignore a demand by shop stewards for a council of action, in North London a council of action was established, embracing the firemen, the trades council and the local Labour Party.

The predominance of Stalinist influence on this committee, combined with the FBU bureaucrats' moves to wind up the strike, meant, however, that the Camden

Essential step

The battered Lass. German (GDR) regime received yet another jolt this week with the publication in 'Die Zeit' of a major statement by Wolf Biermann, singer and poet exiled since and poet e. August 1976.

This was in reply to a manifesto "discussion-document", allegedly written by middle or upper GDR functionaries and published in the West German magazine Der Spiegel in January.

Nerve ends

This has rubbed raw the easily disturbed nerve ends of diplomatic relations between the two German states.

The Spiegel articles contain all the contradictions of the Eastern European dissident movement—the combination of hatred of the privileged and corrupt bureaucracy with dangerous liberal and anti-communist nositions.

Biermann's reply attacks the right wing positions of the document, which he regards as bogus, its author-ship remaining a mystery.

Limousines

He agrees with the characterisation of the bureaucracy as feudal Buddhist priests with incredibly expensive hunting habits, driving luxurious limousines, living in fortified 'golden' residences and attending private clinics restricted to the top 'two-dozen' families, preaching austerity to the underling austerity to the underling management, asserting that the capitalist road is not the one for the GDR. austerity to the underling populace.

But unlike the document's authors, Biermann opposes Ulbricht's introduction of proto-capitalist planning and asserting that

He denies that class struggle has been superceded, that Spanish CP leader Carrillo's anti-Sovietism can be equated with that of Cover for Nazis

Stalinism are 'twins'.

To maintain the latter position, he says, provides a cover for the old Nazis, and falsifies the fundamental character of fascism, which is that it defends the capitalist mode of production. Prague spring

"Stalinism is a socialist revolution infected with bureaucratic syphilis"—only a mortal illness if it is treated lightly.

He also attacks the document's call for 'free secret elections for a national assembly' and an independent court of justice in order to set up a democratic communist order in a united Germany.

He ridicules the idea that under bourgeois society elections can be 'free' and points out that in the GDR 'free' elections would first require a 'Prague Spring'-prolonged and victorious, to remove the bureaucracy.

He also says that the development of a new socialist party, independent of the East German Communist Party (SED) is necessary, although this important point is not emphasised.

It may well be true that, as the Honecker regime in the GDR alleges, the manifestowas written with the collaboration of West German secret services.

But it can be used by the

China, or Stalinism a

that fascism and re 'twins'.

Honecker regime—despite its howls of rage and embarrass-ment—against the development of a socialist alternative in the GDR.

To prevent such a political development is almost as crucial for the Federal as for the Democratic Republic.

The GDR deals with the utmost ruthlessness with its 'socialist' dissidents.

Raymond Bahro, an academic of many years party membership is now in jail for publishing his book "The Alternative".

Robert Havemann, an eminent physicist and party member till his expulsion in 1964 has been confined to Berlin and closely watched since November 1976. His crime in 1976 was 'violating security' by publishing a letter to Honecker protesting against the exiling of Biermann, in Der Spiegel.

Havemann has a record of dennouncing the sclerosis of Marxism under Stalinism, of demanding freedom of information, of welcoming the Prague Spring uprising and of protesting against 'ps; psychiatric detentions

Police constantly patrol his street, the houses on either side of his have been bought by the Stasi (security forces) and flood lights erected.

Followed

When he leaves his house he is followed by 2 to 5 police cars, each with 3 or 4 police in.

His visitors are checked.
In an interview achieved by Le Monde two weeks ago, Havemann pointed to the economic chaos of the GDR.

He showed that an engineer can earn three times as much doing a sparetime job for a bureaucrat as in his 'regular' job.

And he dwelt on the Council of Action was relegated to the status of a strike support committee.

While the question of wage control and the continuation of the present government remain so closely linked, and while the TUC leaders remain openly dedicated to the preservation of government pay dictates, the council of action demand retains its general relevance for workers' struggles.

But as the Transitional

But as the Transitional Programme points out:
"Soviets can arise only at the time when the mass movement enters an openly revolutionary stage".

We cannot artificially create councils of action at a point where major class battles are not in process, and we do not seek to do so.

But we retain the conviction that the formulation of such bodies is an essential step in the struggle of the working class for power.

"From the first moment of their appearance, the soviets, acting as a pivot around which millions of tollers are united in their struggle against the exploiters, become competitors and opponents of local authorities and then of the central government...

Two regimes, the bourgeois and the proletarian, are irreconcilably opposed to each other. Conflict between them is inevitable... In the case of victory, the power of the Soviets, that is the dictatorship of the proletariat and the socialist reconstruction of society, will arise."

In preparing for such a level of struggle we must continue to spell out the need for councils of action, alongside our programme of demands on jobs, wages, workers' control and nationalisation.

This is a major theoretical work giving a detailed political and economic analysis of GDR Stalinism.

corrupting effect of the high status attached to western goods.

But the 'socialist' upsurge in the GDR is not confined to the intellectuals. Havemann refers to a strike last autumn of workers in a lamp factory, who since most of their produce went for export, demanded part-payment in foreign exchange.

Confined

Upheaval

This would enable them to buy coveted goods in the special shops.

One of the biggest upheavals in the GDR took place late last summer when a riot broke out between youth and police at an outdoor concert. Several were killed and the main chant was 'Wolf Biermann'.

It is precisely this connection between dissident intellectuals and the mass of workers that the Honecker overlords would like to prevent—a task towards which the anti-communist Spiegel 'manifesto' might be of considerable assistance.

Biermann's reply is an important step against that and in any case there is every sign that the state of concussion in the GDR bureaucracy is too great for Honecker to succeed.

By Pru Chamberlayne

PHOTO: Chris Davies, Report

powerful graworkers in " workers in the country spent last week waiting for a move on their wage groups the cou most

At the same time their leaders—intent on doing everything to avoid a fight against the Lib-Lab Coalition's 10% pay limit—spent the week in ritual meetings with management, ritual denunciations of the employers and preparation for a decisive blow at their own members' demands.

South Wales lorry drivers—after a strike lasting just six days—voted to accept a deal thought to be in line with lorry drivers in Hull, the Midlands, Scotland and the North—15%.

Details have not been made public but it is severed.

Details have not been made public but it is expected that employers agreed to pay 10% on top of consolidation of Phases I and IT.

Complete victory

ACAS was called into the dispute on Thursday and almost immediately TGWU officials handling the strike called off picketting by the 1,500 drivers, which had already stopped production in several factories in the area and as far afield as Leyland's plant in Cowley.

Despite the clearly inadequate demand, the deal appears to be complete victory for the drivers.

But the impact of this blow against the 10% limit is diminished by the fact that the Government has virtually accepted that haulage bosses will all break the limit rather than risk being closed down.

Although London has still to settle, the only open question is whether 25,000 drivers employed by the National Freight Corporation will also win 15%.

Overtime ban

William Rodgers, Minister of Tran.port, has said he will sack Sir Daniel Pettit, NFC Chairman, if he concedes more than 10%.

Tanker drivers started their overtime ban on their overtime ban on February I amid forecasts of petrol droughts and rising prices.

The action had its biggest effect in Scotland where deliveries were cut by up to 40% in some areas.
The drivers—employed by Shell, Esso, BP and Texaco—are claiming rises between 30% and 40% and started their action in response to a 15% offer, including a 5% productivity rise.

Send to Socialist Press Circulation Manager, 31, Dartmouth Park Hill, London NW5 1HR

But TGWU General Secretary Jack Jones, announced his intention of sabotaging the claim. On Tuesday January 31 Jones met Rodgers and announced "an area of common good".

The need of the 8,000 tanker drivers—whose action has now been stalled for a month—is not for an overtime ban but a strike.

Decisive blow

Only by taking the most decisive action and issuing a call for other sections to come out on their own claims against the 10% limit, can tanker drivers win their full (though again inadequate) demands and strike a decisive blow for the whole working class.

Ashwell, said the resumption of talks was a 'distinct possibility'.

There was, he said, no great difference between the offer and what the drivers would accept.

Railway workers leaders turned up at the British Railways Board on Tuesday January 31 to deliver claims for a restoration of pay to 1975 levels.

Left talking Ray Buckton ASLEF General Secretary, slapped down a claim for £25 - £30 a week, declared the union was "not interested in any government guidelines", and then left.

Vague claim

| | Address | Name . | I would like to receive issues. I enclose the sum of ${\mathfrak k}$ | 50 issues | 25 issues | 10 issues | 5 issues | |
|---|---------|--------|--|-----------|-----------|-----------|----------|---|
| • | d | = | ~ | _ | _ | _ | per - | |
| | = | 2 | \simeq | SS | SS | SS | SS | |
| | e | 60 | = | Ë | Ë | Ë | Ë | |
| | 6 | | | 0 | 0 | e | O | |
| | | | =: | 00 | 90 | 92 | 00 | |
| | | | $\overline{}$ | • | | • | • | |
| | | | CD | • | | | | |
| | | | = | | | | | |
| | | | _ | | | | | |
| | | | 6 | | • | | | 器 |
| | | | C | | | | | |
| | ٠ | • | ei. | | | | | |
| | | | < | | | | | |
| | | | CD | | | | | |
| | | | | | | | | |
| | | | | | | | | 2 |
| | | | - | | | | | |
| | | | 8 | | | | | |
| | | | = | | | | | |
| | | | e | | | | | |
| | | | | | | | | |
| | | | _ | | | | | |
| | | | e | | | | | |
| | | | = | | | | | |
| | | | $\overline{\mathbf{c}}$ | | | | | 8 |
| | | | 0 | | | | | 8 |
| | | | Se | | | | | |
| | | | - | | | | | |
| | | | 7 | | | | | |
| | | | e | | | | | |
| | | | 00 | | | | | |
| | | | Ξ | | | | | |
| | | | 3 | | | | | |
| | | | 0 | | | | | |
| | | | Ť | 80 | £5.50 | £2.20 | £1.10 | |
| | | | 200 | _ | 3 | 8 | 23 | |
| | | | | 0 | S | 2 | - | |
| | | | | 0 | in | is | _ | |
| | | | | 0 | 0 | ò | 0 | |
| | | | | _ | | | | |

But of course Buckton's threat that the Government "would be wise to change its course" is empty without concrete plans to bring the railways to a halt.

The NUR leaders as usual eschewed left talk. They have called for a halt to declining living standards and have added a vague claim for increased 'exceptionally'.

General Secretary, Sidney Weighell, agreed to talk about an 'efficiency scheme' after pay talks are over. In other words Weighell, ignoring the union conference demand for a 63% rise, is ready to settle for a pittance and to sell jobs. Only last week Weighell was demanding that the Railways Board fill 9,000 jobs which his policies are directly responsible for allowing to arise.

Ballot moved

The two most powerful single sections of workers had claims submitted on the same day last week, Thursday 2

PHOTO: John Sturrock, Report

cheif Bill Sir.

But miners and power workers have no reason to believe that action on their claims is a day nearer.

The NUM lodged their 90% claim for rates up to £135 and received in reply an offer of 10%—plus a warning that the NCB expected the 12 month rule to continue for reacher vear.

another year.

Arthur Scargill moved a ballot on industrial action which was seconded by Emlyn Williams, South Wales President, but which did not

The NUM have now asked the Government and the TUC to persuade the NCB to increase their offer—the equivalent of asking Al Capone for protection against his gang his gang.

Scargill's resolution, in the context of his refusal to fight for action against the productivity deals, is little more than a left cover for his nakedness.

Impotence

The truth is that Scargill's impotence as an alternative leader of the NUM has been revealed. To win support for strike action on the £135 claim now the divisive productivity deal has been introduced would require the most rigorous campaign on a programme to confront wage controls and assert the independence of the union. In place of this Scargill offers opportunism, left talk and accomodation to the right wing.

The power workers are in a similar position to the miners. Frank Chapple, who a month ago was talking about the last light going out in Britain, spent Thursday warning the employers about unofficial action by his EETPU members.

Trouble

The Electricity Council have offered 10% plus a £3 a week productivity deal. Electricity supply workers—from three unions all 'represented' by Chapple—are claiming up to 40%.

The problems faced by Chapple in holding back the 90,000 workers were expressed when he warned the employers' organisation to "gird its loins" for trouble. Chapple has already downgraded the claim to £11-12 a week and has warned that unofficial action will probably start if the next offer due on February 15 does not match it.

He clearly has no intention of extinguishing a single light. Pay talks for 67,000 steel workers ended without agreement on Wednesday February I after British Steel increased their offer from 6% to 9½%—provided the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation agrees to cut jobs and sign a disputes procedure which will virtually outlaw unofficial action.

Reasonable claim

Bill Sirs, general secretary, protested that British Steel was 'taking advantage' of their financial crisis but has not made a single gesture towards action. He has not even broken off talks.

The Civil and Public Servants Association and the Society of Public and Civil Servants have both lodged claims well outside the 10% limit.

On Wednesday the SPCS put in for an increase of up to 28%. General secretary, Gerry Gilman, said plaintively: "It is a responsible, reasonable and researched claim. There is no question of the Government's ability to pay it".

The CPSA with 190,000 members to the SPCS's 105,000, submitted a claim of £6-£19 (14%-24%) the following day.

Bizarre

The claim payable from April 1 is supposedly based on loss of purchasing power and is made up of £6 minimum on top of consolidation.

Perhaps the most bizarre negotiations were held on Friday on national rates for three million engineering workers. The union team, under Hugh Scanlon, decreased their claim from 7.9% to 5%. The employers increased their offer from 2.5% to 4.5%. £3 now separate the £60 minimum skilled rate from the £57 offer.

"Unacceptable"

For many engineering workers the rates are the basis on which local rises are negotiated. But for tens of thousands the rise in the minimum rate sets their actual percentage wage rate.

Scanlon called the offer "totally unacceptable" but his only conclusion is that it might be better to break off national negotiations altogether and leave local sections to fight for their own wage increases.

ders Daly and Gormle)

Condemned

Thousands of engineering workers in small factories where membership is weak would be condemned to no wage increases at all. Scanlon would also be able to wash the union's hands of those sections which fought for claims larger than 10%.

In all, just short of four million workers were negotiating for wage increases outside the 10% last week.

They have the industrial muscle several times over to bring the country to a halt. Almost any two sections together has the power to smash the 10% and break the Lib-Lab coalition. Yet the chances of this happening, if anything, receded during the week. All the unions are led by outright supporters of the supporters of wage control.

Inadequate

In 'normal' times militant leaders would be sufficient to lead a major breach of the 10%. Under conditions where the TUC and the whole labour bureaucracy is determined to uphold that limit those militants have become totally inadequate because of their refusal to confront the political question involved—the breaking of the Lib-Lab coalition established for the sole purpose of maintainig wage control.

Workers wishing to break the 10% must understand that to do so requires bringing down a government—as surely as the miners were forced to bring down Heath in 1974.

They require new leaders. Yet those new leaders must have as a minimum requirement a political will to stand up against the array of fake lefts and Stalinist betrayers as well as the openly right wing leaderships.

Clarity

At the same time those leaders must root themselves in the strength of the working class, which is capable of sweeping aside the government and the TUC.

The lessons of the toolroom strike, the power workers action and the firemen all point to one conclusion: that strength without political understanding will almost certainly be snared by the treachery of their politically conscious, but thoroughly reactionary leadership.

leadership.

It is to fight for that clarity that Trotskyists must campaign in the coming period as the major actions against Phase 3 break out from beneath the smothering cloak of the labour leaders.

The demand must be to break the 10% limit, and win full catching up pay increases, protected against inflation through cost of living clauses.

TOTO

Ford workers at Halewood are now in the fifth week of their strike against management speed-up plans.

Already, 10,000 men have been laid off as a result of the strike in the press shop, and last weekend they were joined by 1,500 workers at the Southampton plant which makes Transit vans.

Last Friday Jack Jones, TGWU General Secretary met union officials to discuss the question of making the dispute official.

The results of these talks are expected later this week.

Crack nes Pay

PHOTO: Mark Rusher IFL

Cracks have appeared in the ranks of Newspaper Society employers after a week of work to rule by National Union of Journalist members.

While the Newspaper Society has been laying down tough rulings banning local wage negotiations for provincial journalists, individual employers have offered local pay rises in excess of 10% and a promise that they will be backdated to January 1.

The work to rule—including a ban on night work, a refusal to use private transport and an obsturctive one job at a time rule—has hit papers with 100% NUJ membership hard.

The action is totally inadequate to win a general wage rise openly breaking the pay policy, but will undoubtedly win under the counter deals for many journalists.

But because the campaign has centred solely on the removal of restrictions on local bargaining it, has done nothing to decide the question of what will happen when those talks start.

By allowing chapels which reach agreement with their local managements to call off their sanctions the NUJ leadership has opted for a few gains at the expense of a general wage rise throughout the industry.

Meanwhile the powerful National Graphical Association which verbally rejected the twelve month rule has held back its members until the annual review in March.

SOS partheig backs

National Union of Seamen general secretary, Jim Slater, has given his backing to a plan to maintain racist pay differentials in l ships for another British er five

Slater has endorsed a report* which abandons the union's claim for an immediate removal of differentials under which Asian seamen (who constitute one-third of the lower ranks on British merchant ships) earn £49 a month against British seamen's £187 a month, for the same work on the same ship.

Slater's action is in solidarity with capitalism at home and overseas.

The report is the joint work of the employers, the government and the NUS-in the shape of Slater and it has unanimously recommended that the government should grant a five year period of

Meanwhile the employers will use the time to rid themselves of labour which is no longer to be so cheap.

The report states that if differentials had been removed in 1976 the employers would have faced a cost rise of between 106% and 169%.

sea.

But his reasons are also international. Slater said that the NUS accepted the change over 5 years after the Indian government predicted widespread labour unrest inside India if pay rates rose too quickly.

This view was supported by the Indian sea unions, on whom pressure to fight for higher wages would have become immense.

geance on Monday against boilermakers who refused to knuckle under to a 'no strike' promise in return for work.

The employers issued 1,000 redundancy notices, most of them to boilermakers and have promised more to

Steak house

Nearly two weeks after the sacking of 84 workers in Garners Steak Houses in Central London, their strike for union recog-nition has yet to prove successful.

Although picketing has forced the closure of all but a handful of the fourteen restaurants involved, Garners' General Manager has declared that 'we can carry on operating with our present staff and we fully intend to do so'.

It is clear that in the lengthy build-up to the management notice expresses surprize that anyone should prefer a union to the company staff association.

Apart from giving the strike official backing and organising limited blacking, the TGWU official's activity has been in organising the first of a series of demonstration marches last Friday to plaster restaura with posters dec 'right to work' an 'rent-a-pickets', strations will act not as a way to strengthen the strike but as a diversion for the need to put further direct pressure onto the employer.

A programme of mass pickets at peak times on those premises still trading would be the best means of doing this.

Similarily, blacking of supplies has to be stepped up and a campaign organised throughout the TGWU in London beginning with a call for the Garners workers branch.

Alongside this is the need for the strikers to join with other trade unionists in the preparation of self-defence squads to defend pickets

It is this dramatic rise that has ensured the collaboration of Slater in this apartheid at

rights

demanding

took

Hunter manage-ook savage vensavage ven on Monday

But clearly these demands must be linked with an allout battle against the treacherous leadership on the Clyde—the Communist Party and Jimmy Airlie, who welcomed the scab ships diverted from Swan Hunter and who is directly responsible for the sackings.

Council of action

The shipyard workers are being held up as an example to their fellow workers all over Europe—work is to be given only in exchange for basic union rights. Responsibility

The workers must turn their attention to Lib-Lab coalition w policies have been dire towards an end to u rights and mass sack All those who defend government in the La Party and the unions be removed from position of leadership.

This campaign clacamot be confined to chiovards or to the Tyne.

mass sackings.
who defend this in the Labour
the unions must
d from positions

The Tyneside workers have a responsibility to defend every last job. They must demand that the work available is shared out among all the workers without the loss of a single penny from the pay packets.

Shop stewards must prepare plans to occupy the plant and to demand the plant around the Polish ship order and other orders, directly to workers' committees.

They must demand that the allocation and execution of the orders is controlled by the shipyeard workers' stewards committees.

Public works

A programme of public works must be demanded for the docks on projects in the interests of, and under the control of, the working class.

PHOTO: Ray Smith IFL

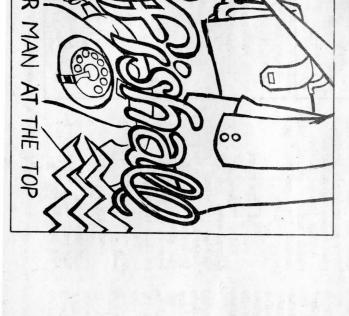

This campaign clearly cannot be confined to the shipyards or to the Tyne.

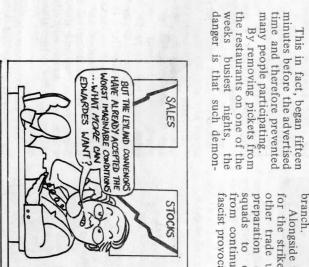

A council of action must be called for to draw in support for the Tyneside workers and unite their struggle for jobs with all struggles against the antiworking class policies breaking out on wages and jobs in the area.

Other shipyards' stewards must call mass meetings to declare support for the Swan Hunter workers.

The treacherous leadership of the Govan shipyard must be replaced and solidarity built with the Tyneside to defend their jobs. Airlie has a short memory about the Clyde to defend their jobs during the work-in. The short memory support flooding Clyde to defend during the wo working class has i

DOES HE WANT US TO ON OUR HEADS OR SOME O.K. THEN, I'LL SEE WH

TO STAND

Gonvenors articipal speed-up sackings

The Edwardes plan for British Leyland, which was dramatically unfolded in a plush hotel in Kenilworth last week, means an intensification of speed-up throughout Leyland's plants. And it will mean the loss of jobs through so-called "natural wastage" and "voluntary redundancy".

Edwardes much heralded "reorganisation" turned out to be the old set-up under

And the "decentralisation", announced amid fan-fares of press enthusiasm, turned out in reality to be rigid centralisation, based on corporate wage negotiations at national level. w names

No details

12,500 jobs are to go from Leyland Cars, we are told. But no details were given as to which plants will suffer cuts, or whether the jobs will be pruned through cuts in production or reallocation of

The objective, however, is clearly speed-up.
The previous managing director of Leyland Cars, Derek Whittaker had made the point last October that Leyland regarded it "a matter of principle" not to compromise on manning disputes.

300

Support voted

stewards movement in Leyland.

No wonder Edwardes has said that 'participation' will continue in operation!

The Kenilworth meeting summed up the essence of the class collaborationist strategy embodied in participation.

It consisted not of convenors and managers from each plant. Some estimates suggest that managers actually outnumbered

True enough, since then the Speke plant, which builds the TR7, has been on strike for three months over speed up and management's breach of the mutuality agreement. In the Cowley Body Plant jobs on the tracks are being reassigned, requiring considerable speed-up.

And in the Longbridge plant management are ignoring all agreements in order to drive up work effort. It was under these conditions that convenors from the 36 Leyland cars plants voted at the Kenilworth meeting-with only five against—to support the Edwardes plan. Edwardes' speech was followed by a motion of support-moved by Pat Lowry, the Leyland Corporation's Industrial Relations Manager!

Standing ovation

They followed their vote with a standing ovation for Edwardes.

There is no greater testimony than this to the destructive effects of 'worker participation' on the shop

This move provoked a sharp intervention from Bob Fryer—the newly elected TGWU convenor at the Cowley Assembly Plant.

Fryer challenged the validity of a motion moved by Lowry, and objected to any vote being taken in a joint meeting of managers and Convenors.

This principled position was immediately attacked by Granville Hawley, national officer of the TGWU, and Terry Duffy, Midlands AUEW Executive Council member.

Full support

The attack was backed up by the Director of the Long-bridge complex!

These speakers were matched by Derek Robinson, who, while a leading member of the Communist Party, is also senior 'participation' representative and convenor of the Longbridge plant.

Robinson declared his full support for the Edwardes plan. Eddie McGarry, right wing convenor at Canley, went even further, proclaiming that anyone who opposed Edwardes would have to be "off their head".

Sharp intervention

Reactionary

These same reactionary convenors had only a few days before been touring plants persuading shop stewards to back their "alter-

The coalition government was given its orders by the CBI, the Tories and the courts this week—"attack the working class directly, don't use us as an anvil".

Sam Silkin, the attorneygeneral, was forced to apologise to the courts on Monday and to allow a deal outside the 10% limit to be paid.

The spectacle of the Tories pushing through a breach of the policy came precisely because the courts and the Tories were determined to resist

His statement is a blow against the government black list. The employer, Sir Rupert Speir—who signed the deal in November—described the statement as "a victory for common sense"—in other words attacks on the working class must be carried out directly, not via the employer.

It was clear Silkin knew the courts would defend employers even at the risk of damaging the coalition grip on pay policy.

attacks on employers, squeezed between the threat of a strike and government sanctions.

Silkin was forced to concede the right of Holliday Hall engineering firm to pay an undisclosed sum outside the 10% limit.

He declared that any thought that the government was trying to force the breaking of agreements was a mistake.

"Insofar as those statements were construed as an invitation to employers to break contracts of employment, I unreservedly withdraw that interpretation on native" to Edwardes—an increase in production from 850,000 to 1 million cars a

open its full accounts for independent trade union

Edwardes

Robinson

But as soon as Edwardes got up at Kenilworth and dismissed their "plan" as impractical with a contemptuous wave of the hand, these plant 'participation' men obediently rose to give him a standing ovation.

They then got down to the real meat of the day—nodding through the vicious so-called "Security of Earnings" document, which contains farreaching anti-strike clauses and new procedures for disciplining workers.

This was the document voted out a year ago by mass meetings of workers throughout Leyland plants.

They completed the day by agreeing to the job evaluation criteria required by Leyland to carry through the central bargaining programme designed to control wages in the future.

Quite obviously such servile "leaders" have nothing to offer Leyland workers; who stand to face the full brunt of the drive by the Lib-Lab coalition government to force up exploitation on the shop floor through a sustained attack on manning levels.

Workers must reject every aspect of Edwardes' plan.

It starts out not from the interests of the workforce and the working class as a whole but from the employers' lust for profit; it aims to force Leyland workers to shoulder the whole brunt of a capitalist crisis that is none of their making; and in doing so it draws on figures and plans which have been carefully hidden from the eyes of trade unionists.

Now the convenors elected by workers to defend jobs and conditions have been transformed through the worker participation machinery into the supervisory police force of the management.

There must be a complete break with participation. In place of these management stooges workers must elect committees with the task of fighting to force Leyland to

march News Gay

The trial and successful prosecution of 'Gay News' and its editor for the mediaeval offence of 'blasphemous libel' will be resisted by a demonstration called this weekend by the Gay News Defence Committee.

Forces from the labour and trade union movement, students unions, women's and gay groups will show their hostility to repressive legislation which attacks the rights of gay men and women in a whole number of ways.

The blasphemy law is only one lightweight weapon from the vast arsenal at the disposal of the state, which starts from a determination to uphold the structure and stability of the bourgeois family unit.

PHOTO: John Sturrock, Report

Examination.

This would expose the way in which the "nationalised" Leyland corporation is used as little more than a marketing outlet for the entirely privately owned and hugely profitable component manufacturers that actually produce two-thirds of each finished Leyland car.

Fraudulent claim

It would expose the fraud-ulent claim that "taxpayers' money" is being poured into Leyland to support an over-paid, underworked, labour

It would show that money put into Leyland under Ryder is being charged at rates of interest up to 13%, amounting to £60 million a

It would show the need to planned, integrated motor and component industry, with a programme of useful public works to ensure that the available resources are utilised to the maximum.

At the same time wherever management attempt to cut back jobs, throwing large numbers of workers into pools of surplus labour, these moves must be resisted

Workers must demand the reduced amount of work available be shared equally among the whole workforce, with no loss in average earnings, under the control of trade union committees.

Where lines, models or plants are threatened with closure, this must be fought by occupation. gays.

But the campaign provides an opportunity to forge real links between the gay movement, by showing the necessity for a common struggle against repressive legislation.

The specific oppression of homosexuals is made far more severe by the same crisis of capitalism which threatens all workers with wage cuts, unemployment and political expression.

Wherever the defence campaign can be extended into trade union branches and constituency Labour Parties, it must be taken up as the real basis for a campaign to repeal all legislation which restricts the democratic rights of gay women and men.

The Gay News Defence Committee national demonstration meets at the Temple in London at 1.30 on Saturday 11 February.

Extra lever

Every "voluntary" redundancy, every job left vacant through "natural wastage" means an extra worker on the 1½ million-strong dole queues and gives Leyland an extra lever to force home speed-up on those remaining.

The Edwardes report must not only be rejected—it must be defeated in struggle.

And in the course of these struggles the Lib-Lab coalition that has spawned Edwardes and hatched his plan must be broken.

Inadequate

This is what dictates the bourgeoisie's determination to suppress homosexuality.

The campaign's call simply for a repeal of the blasphemy law is thus inadequate to offer a real perspective to

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF SOCIALIST PRESS
Public Meeting

Thursday 16 February 7.30 p.m. King William Hotel Market Place HULL

LONDON
Friday 10 February
7.30 pm
New Theatre, LSE
Houghton Street
London WC2
Plus FILM