Too much perfume spoiled the mar-ital relations of the Countess Cowley, formerly an American actress. Perhaps the count rubbed it on thick, as a counter move against halitosis, and perhaps if he forgot his pride sufficiently to make a clean mouth of it to the countess he might not be as he is today. On the other hand, a witness stated that the countess' gentleman friend followed a bottle of whiskey as the little lamb used to follow Mary. All in all, the doings of the British aristocracy have not lost anything in pungency with the passing of centuries.

Much excitement and indignation reigned in the house of commons when a labor member charged that drinking facilities in the house were so perfect that honorable members could not resist the temptation to overindulge. Honorable members of all parties were excited and a unanimous vote whitewashed the august assembly. Still none dared "call" the accuser, for the very good reason that he was speaking the truth.

This testimony was given Senator James A. Reed, democrat of Missouri by Wm. M. Rogers, of Indianapolis who declared Watson had shown him card of membership in the klan's highest and most secretive organization. Rogers swore he, too, was a member of the Imperial Council and

This came in the fact of Watson's ecent denial of membership in the dan, but Rogers explained that this imperial order of the masters' organi ation was maintained solely for important political personages who de sired that their klan membership should be kept secret.

It gives the courts, or such other bodies as may be set up from time to time, the power to determine what strikes are justified and what strikes are criminal offenses.

The far-reaching effects of this decision upon the whole labor movement may be gathered from one of its paragraphs which

The fact that the injury was inflicted by a strike is sometimes a justification. But a strike may be illegal because of its purpose, however orderly the manner in which it is conducted.

The question of violence on the part of the strikers does not enter into the matter, says Judge Brandies, the pet of the iberal elements, who wrote the decision. This is, of course, of great value to the enemies of labor who hitherto, have generally Therefore the courts of Kansas had a based their case against strikes and strikers upon alleged acts right to punish August Dorchy, viceof violence for which some form of proof had to be submitted.

It is interesting and instructive to note that the workers who made the fight against the Kansas Industrial Court—Alex Howat and August Dorchy—were expelled from the United Mine Workers' Union by President John L. Lewis because he, too, claimed that the strike was "illegal."

Industrial Court Law of Kansas Upheld

> By LAURENCE TODD (Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.-Labor in America has no right to strike, says the federal supreme court. Neither the common law nor the fourteenth amendment to the constitution confers such a right upon the workers. president of District 14, United Mine Workers of America, for calling an Mackie Fuel Co.

"Liberal" Judges Join Reaction. Decision to this effect was made by the federal supreme court Oct. 25, Justice Brandeis reading the opinion. Inasmuch as Brandeis and Holmes are the two members of the court who most often take the side of the workers, this opinion has created nuch surprise.

As set forth by Brandeis in his opinion, the Dorchy case was this: Alex. Howat and Dorchy, as district ively, acting under authority of their executive board, called a strike on reb. 3, 1921, at the Mackie mine in to a union member, formerly employed there, the sum of $180 which he claimed to be due him in increased rate of pay.

The wage scale at the mine required an increase of $1.35 a day after a miner passed the age of 19. This man, Mishmash by name, claimed the higher rate by producing evidence of his age, while the company offered conflicting evidence that he

Orderly Strikes Illegal.

"The right to carry on businessbe it called liberty or property-has value." says Brandeis. "To interfere with this right without just cause is unlawful. The fact that the injury was inflicted by a strike is sometimes a justification. But a strike may be illegal because of its purpose, howver orderly the manner in which it is conducted.

'To collect a stale claim due to a fellow member of the union who was formerly employed in the business is not a permissable purpose. In the absence of a valid agreement to the contrary, each party to a disputed claim may insist that it be determined only by a court. To enforce payment by a strike is certainly coercion.

Strikes Are Crimes. "The legislature may make such action punishable criminally as extortion or otherwise. And it may subject to punishment him who uses the power or influence incident to his office in a union to order the strike." The walkout in this case was ordered only after the district executive board of the union announced that the Mishmash claim has been approved by the joint board of miners and operators, and that the company had refused to pay. Brandeis states that there was no evidence that the claim had been submitted to arbitration or that any contract existed under which it could be so settled. It was two years old when the strike occurred,

A Threat Against All Unions. By its latest action the federal supreme court has given a shock to American Federation of Labor officials who believed that the Kansas Industrial Court law was dead. Officials of Labor Show Their First Concern Is with Old Party Politics

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE present congressional campaign has again revealed many outstanding officials of labor as being old party politicians first, and secondly, or not at all, concerned with the actual problems of the working class.

This is the only explanation for the fact that President William Green, head of the American Federation of Labor, shouts democrat, while the heads of the various railroad brotherhoods are yelling republican in the present senatorial struggle in Ohio.

Under the tutelage of Samuel Gompers, the A. F. of L. always trailed the donkey in its political aspirations. The democratic middle class politicians were willing to listen to Gompers at greater length than the politicians of great capitalism in the republican national conventions, that Gompers habitually attended. William Green has the additional incentive, however, of having always been an Ohio democrat. Instead of developing the independent political power of the workers, as he was repeatedly ordered to do by numerous conventions of the United Mine Workers of America, in which he rose to the position of international secretary-treasurer, Green kept glued to the donkey's tail, had himself elected democratic state senator from his home town of Coshocton, and so loyal were his services on behalf of the ruling class of the state that he was "lifted" to the presidency of the state senate. Green, therefore, in order to maintain his political alliances in Ohio, issues a letter endorsing the candidacy of Atlee Pomerene, the democratic candidate for United States sen-

This Pomerene, who has an antilabor record already in the United States senate, is denounced by the railroad brotherhoods as "positively dangerous." The railroad officials ask how any worker can vote for a man whose prejudices against the labor movement are so intense and personal as Pomerene's seem to be. In the senate, Pomerene was just as loyal to the railroad corporation interests as Kellogg and Poindexter, the former now secretary of state in Coolidge's cabinet.

But the railroad brotherhoods offer in place of Pomerene, none other than the republican, Senator Frank B. Willis, candidate for reelection, who is attacked by the A. F. of L. officials.

The railroad outfit is closely tied up to the republican crowd. The Watson-Parker bill was infamous sponsored jointly in the house and senate by these two reactionary republicans, Senator Watson and Representative Parker. W. N. Doak, legislative agent in Washington of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, likes Willis, because it is claimed he is a White House favorite, which means that he stands in well with the Coolidge gang.

Senator Willis is denounced by the A. F. of L. officials because of his hostility to the Ohio Workmen's Compensation Law. As Ohio governor he signed the Gallagher Bill, which repealed the mine run law which the Ohio miners advocated and for which they had fought for 25 years. So that's Willis.

Thus the nonpartisan policy of the American Federation of Labor, clashing with the nonpartisan policy of the railroad brotherhoods, effectively cancel each other. Labor's vote is thus neutralized on the advice of the old party politicians in leading places in the labor movement. No greater service could be rendered the anti-labor capitalist interests.

But this isn't all. Laurence Todd, the Federated Press correspondent at Washington, reports that the International Association of Machinists has refused to take sides as between the "two bad political eggs in Ohio, and that President Robertson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen was likewise loath to find any difference between them." Yet these same neutrality politicians become highly indignant at the indifferent attitude that workers display toward the electoral struggle. They do not come out for labor's own party. They are just a dead weight in the class

Great masses of workers in Ohio will not be deceived by this "nonpartisan" spectacle presented to them by the officialdom as workers' political action. They must inevitably come to the conclusion that all so-called "friends" as well as "enemies" in the employers' political organizations are equally black foes of the workingclass.

Evidence of the awakening of Ohio labor is seen in the renewed efforts in that state toward the building of the Labor Party.

The struggle for independent political action in Ohio, developing during this campaign in spite of the betrayal of the officialdom, must be redoubled after the election day has passed, when the so-called "nonpartisanism," no matter which way the election goes, will be thoroly discredited.

Ohio labor, thruout the great industries of that state, can well set an example to the workers of the and in the crystallization of the demand for independent political action of the workers thru their own Labor Party.

Belgium "Stabilizes" Coin by Borrowing a Sum of $150,000,000

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—The Belgian franc disappeared from the list of foreign exchange quotations today, and in its place appeared the new form of Belgian currency used exclusively in foreign trade—the belga. This is in accordance with the new stabilization plan, made possible thru the sale in the international markets of $100,000,000 of new thirty-year 7 per cent, Belgian government bonds, of which $50,000,000 is offered in Amer ica today at 94.

The Belgian franc, to be used here after only in Belgian domestic trade, has been stabilized at 174.3 to the British pound and 36 to the American dollar. This is equivalent to 2.78 cents for the franc, or about one seventh of its pre-war value.

The new belga, quoted for the first time today at 13.88 cents for demand and 13.90 cents for cables, is equal in value to five paper francs, and with a definite gold equivalent of .209211 grams. Rossoni, a renegade anarcho-syndicalist, is now secretary of corporations, the office binding fascist labor unions to the employers. His plan was not approved by the industrialists and Mussolini because it was felt Behind the Scenes in Canada that inexperienced men could not take over the senate. Italy's Play for Syria and Syria's Revolt

THE furious pace at which Italian imperialism is developing is again indicated by the report, reliably given in the Journal de Genevois, a paper close to the league of nations' affairs. that the approaching conversations of the French foreign minister, Briand, with Mussolini will take up the question of transfering the mandate over Syria, given to France in 1920, to Italy. In return Italy is to renounce all claims to Morocco and Tunis, the north African reserve of French imperfalism.

Whether or not Italy secures the mandate over Syria, it is certain that the Italian-inspired demand of Spain for Tangiers has thrown France into a Frenzy of fear at the prospect of a loss of position in the Mediterranean and a strengthened rival in north Africa. The tremendous reserve of man power for its army-which is now the largest in Europe, if not in the world-that is afforded by the 35, 000,000 inhabitants of French colonies in north Africa, who gave 750,000 colored troops to France in the world war and who compose an ever greater proportion of its armed troops, is not a light matter for France. And, in addition, there is the wealth of mineral resources, especially in Morocco, to be considered r would not, therefore, be improb-L able that France would think of handing Syria to Italy in return for other assurances. This is all the more possible when the continued development of the revolutionary movement in Syria is held in mind. French policies in Syria have been anything but successful. The rebellion of the Djebel Druzes is by no means liquidated. The former high-commissioner, M. de Jouvenel, has been recalled and another French colonial dictator, M. Ponsot, put in his place. All Are Union Members.

All members of our F. D. N. belong to the unions of their trade and also to the fractions. The activity of the comrades in the unions is the major subject for discussion at our unit meetings. Quite often a comrade is reprimanded if his behavior and his activity in his union warrants it.

Activity Well Planned. Our factory work is still in the state of discussion, but a practical plan of of the various local organizations of proceeding with the work is already mapped out. On all the campaigns conducted by the party, such as aid for the British miners, membership drive. Passaic strike, etc., the comrades were given detailed instructions how to proceed with this work in their shops and also in their respective unions. The comrades at the successive meetings were requested to report how these instructions were carried out, which quite often led to lively discussions.

Aid Our Paper, Great efforts were stressed to aid and spread The DAILY WORKER. Our nucleus obtained subscriptions for it for the sum of $100 and collected about $20 for the campaign.

When the summer encampment was held our nucleus sold tickets for the Workmen's Circle, of which he is a member, donated $50 dollars for the striking furriers. Our nucleus collected about $160 for the Passaic strikers and four bundles of clothing.

Individually the members of our unit collected for the British miners about $30, but the effort to have their worthy cause fell thru, due to the opposition of the reactionary leaders Darcy pointed out the strenuous ef- of these unions. How much an individual comrade can accomplish if he seen from the fact that a good deal of the above given figures were collected thru the initiative and effort of a single comrade.

The greatest amount of the given contributions and collections were gathered among the workers of the Mt. Vernon Fur Dressing Co., 3743 Bronxwood avenue, Mt. Vernon, N. Y. a shop employing about 80 workers.

At the last meeting we made the first step in the $50,000 campaign conducted by The DAILY WORKER. Our unit collected $40 in cash and the rest pledged to bring the $5, which each member was taxed, to the next meet-

In general our meetings are interesting and participations and discussions are not limited to a few so-called leaders. In order to keep up this life and interest and also to exchange information that other party units may profit by our experience, we have de cided from time to time to send arti cles to The DAILY WORKER describing the life and work of our unit. This duty of a worker correspondent was not assigned to one comrade in particular, but it was decided that each member of the unit should have an opportunity to perform this work, and this article is the first attempt to carry the adopted secision thru.

Wicks Speaks at Last Pittsburgh Election Rally on Oct. 31st.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 28.—The ject is: "What Do the Elections Mean last Pittsburgh election rally in the to the Workers?" Pennsylvania campaign will be held on Sunday, Oct. 31 at 8 p. m. at the Labor Lyceum, 35 Miller street. H. M. Wicks, Workers Party candidate for governor, and Parthenia Hills, candidate for lieutenant governor, and Max Jenkins, candidate for secretary of internal affairs, will be the speakers. A musical program is also in prepara tion. The meeting is under the auspices of Street Nucleus No. 2 of the Pittsburgh party.

A Correction.

The DAILY WORKER Monday, Oct 25, carried a news item about a Work ers' Party city conference to be held in Pittsburgh Oct. 29. Due to unfore seen reasons, a serious error was made in the figures quoted dealing with the attendance of meetings. It should be "out of 148 members on an average 83 members attend meetings," and not 28 as published in The DAILY WORKER.

SHOW THAT CARELESSNESS DOES NOT CAUSE YOUTH ACCIDENTS IN MINES

BY A YOUNG MINER.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—In the mines nearly every day somebody gets hurt. And most of these "accidents" occur to young miners. Even the the youth are in a minority in the mines, they suffer the most accidents. Why? Because they have the most dangerous jobs. Yet the miners and even sometimes the operators claim that most of the accidents that occur are preventable.

I was talking to some coal miners just today and I pointed out this fact. These miners answered me, "Well, that is because the youth is careless and reckless." "Well," they say, "look at this state of Illinois. We have state laws for their protection. One law says that no car shall be coupled or uncompled without bringing "the motor to a stop. But there are damn few cars that are coupled or un-Safety is alright-and the operators coupled in the state with the motors at a perfect stop and it is on these jobs that most of the accidents occur."

Well that may be so, but anyone who says that these boys deliberately couple and uncouple the "cars on the fly" or haul greater loads than is safe for them, without the company expecting them to work that way, has the facts all "balled up."

Take an instance. In one of the Peabody mines around Taylorville where the boys decided they would live up to state laws on coupling and uncoupling cars. What happened? The first day they brought up 1,200 tons less, the second day 1,800 tons before the company will.

less, until they were bringing up actually 2,200 tons less than they would have in risking their lives and breaking the state laws. What did the company do? Put on more motors and men? Hell no! That costs money. They shut the mine down, threw every man out of work and thru their stool pigeons spread the news around that the mines would open up if the boys would agree to risk their lives by working as they had done before, that is, to break the state laws. The boys had no other recourse, they agreed, and Peabody opened up the mine again.

Well this is only one instance and will bet my next week's wages that there are many more such cases. What the hell do you think the operators care how much we risk our lives, as long as dollars come their way. do deliver plenty of lectures on itbut when it costs money and will cause a little shrink in their profits, that's no good. And I have yet to meet a miner that can point to a single benefit that the miners received without putting up a fight for it. That's what the union is for.

The young miners who want to safeguard themselves, who don't want to swell the figures of the killed and crippled miners, should attend their union meetings, bring up these questions. If the young miners don't fight to safeguard their own lives. they can wait 'till hell freezes over

Election Rallies

By a Young Worker Correspondent. BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 28.—Great interest is shown by the working youth of Boston at the special propaganda campaign open meetings arranged by the district committee of the league in connection with the state election

Big crowds of young people are eagerly listening to our speakers for they feel that it's their issue. It is about them that we are talking. The necessity for the working youth to participate in political life and organization is clearly pointed out; the right to vote and hold office for youth of 18 and over; the need for the working youth to help to elect workers' candidates; to organize in the trade unions and to join the Young Workers (Communist) League in order to free the workers from the capitalist yoke, is being explained to the working youth. The league slogans are accepted with much enthusiasm and favor. At these meetings placards bearing the league slogans such as—the abolition of child labor; a minimum wage for all young workers; the abolition of compulsory military training in the schools and colleges and the liquidation of militaristic institutions; working youth organize politically and economically; join your trade unions; join the Young Workers League; the 5.75 right to vote and hold office for youth of 18 and over-are being carried, literature sold, leaflets distributed and contact with the American youth made and applications for the Y. W. L. passed out.

The league of this district is holding these meetings everywhere in the city and district. The working youth feels that the Y. W. L. is really the organization that champions their

The Ela mine, located about mile below Webster, has been closed for two years and four months and hopes had been given up that it would ever resume, and the announcement that by the latter part of this week coal would be mined was the most welcome announcement to the residents not only of Webster but the entire upper Monongahela valley Three hundred men will find employment at this mine.

Bunny wanted to say, "Try cutting off his allowance," but ne realized that that would be one of those "horrid" things for which Bertie was always rebuking him. So he said, "It's quite a problem"—in the style of a diplomat or politician.

"The young people are too much of a problem for me.' said Charlie's mother. "They want to race about all day, and they just insist on dragging you with them, and it's getting to be more han I can stand.' So then Bunny was sorry for Charlie's mother -he had supposed that she did all this "gadding' because she enjoyed it. To look at her, she was a nautical maid, plump but shapely, clad in spotless white and blue, with fluffy brown hair hat the breeze was always blowing into her bright blue eves. Bunny stole a glance now and then, and judged that the surgical operations upon her face must have been successes, for he saw no trace of them.

"I've devoted my whole life to that boy," the nautical maid was saying, "and he doesn't appreciate it a bit. The more you do for people the more they take it as a matter of course. This afternoon I think I'll go on strike! Will you back me up?

So when the golfing expedition was setting out. Charlie announced, in a tone loud enough for the whole company, "Mumsie's not going—she's got a crush on Bunny!" At which they all laughed merrily, and trooped down the ladder, secretly relieved to be rid of one of the old folks, who insisted on "tagging along," and trying to pretend to be one of the crowd, when it was perfectly evident that they were not and could not.

So Bunny and Mrs. Norman sat on the deck of the "Siren," in two big canvas chairs under a striped canvas awning, and sipped fruit juices and chatted about many things. She wanted to know about his life, and his family; Bunny, having heard something about the ways of "mumsies," guessed that she was nvestigating Bertie as a possible daughter-in-law, so he mentioned all the nice things he could. Assuming that she would not be entirely indifferent to practical matters, he told about the Ross tract, how he and Dad had dscovered it, and how the wells contnued to flow. And Mrs. Norman said, "Oh, money, money, always money! We all of us have too much, and don't kow how to buy happiness with it!"

She went on to reveal that she was Theosophist, and how there was a great mahatma coming, and we were all going to earn to live on a different astral plane. She had noticed that Bunny, when he stood against a dark background at night, had a very decided golden aura—had anyone ever mentioned it to him? It meant that he had a spiritual nature, and was destined for higher things.

Then she began to ask about his ideas; she had heard nothing about his "disgrace" at the university, apparently, and he gave her just a hint as to his conviction that there was something wrong with our social order, the world's distribution of wealth. The nautical maid, leaning back among her silken cushions, replied, "Oh, but that's all material! And it seems to me we're too much slaves to materal things already; our happiness lies in earning to rise above them.'

That was a large question, and Bunny dodged it, and presently Mrs. Norman was talking about herself. Her life was very inhappy. She had married when she was very young, too young to know what she was doing, except obeying her parents. Her husband had been a bad man, he had kept mistresses and treated her cruelly. She had devoted her life to her son, but it all seemed a disappointment, the more you gave to people the more they would take. Charlie was always in love, but he didn't really mow about love, he wasn't capable of unselfishness. What did Bunny think about love?

This was another large queston; and again Bunny ducked. He said he ddin't know what to think, he saw that people made themselves unhappy, and he was waiting, trying to learn more about the matter. So Mrs. Norman proceeded to tell him more. The dream of love, a really true and great love, never died in the soul of a man or woman; they might become cynical, and say they didn't believe in it, but they were always unhappy, and secretly hoping and waiting, because really, love was the greatest thing in the world. It made Mrs. Norman happy to know that among thi loud and noisy generation there was one young man who was not making himself cheap.

The loud and noisy generation came back to the "Siren," and cut off these intimacies. Charlie's "mumsie" went below, and when she reappeared, it was in the dining-saloon, with painted panels of Watteau nymphs and shepherds, and seventeenth century ladies reclining to the lascivious pleasing of a lute. The hostess was no longer the nautical maid, but instead a great lady of many charms, a shimmer of pale blue satin, and a gleam of golden hair, and snowy bosom and shoulders, and a double rope of pearls. It was striking transformation, and Bunny, who had watched Aunt Emma at work, ought to have understood but his mind had been on other matters.

Mrs. Norman had the young oil-man next to her at table; and when they danced, she asked him would he dance with her these horrid young fellows neglected their hostess quite shamelessly. They danced, and Bunny discovered that she was a good dancer, and she said that he was an exquisite dancer, she just adored it, and would he dance some more with her? Bunny was willing; there was no one else he particularly wanted to dance with. She had a faint elusive perfume, and he might have learned about that also from Aunt Emma, but he had the vague impression that women somehow naturally smelled that way, and it was very sweet of them. The steel-widow's bosom was bare most of the way, and her back was bare all the way, down to where he

Charlie teased them, and the rest of the company giggled. But next morning, when they took a long walk about the deck, Bunny realized that it took these young people less than twentyfour hours to get used to anything, and after that it was a bore. So he sat with Mrs. Norman, and drove with her, and danced with her, and played golf with her, while Charlie did all these things with Bertie, and it suited at least three of them completely.

The British Miners Can Win!

What the rulers of Great Britain look upon as the next move against the working class and their organizations if the defeat of the miners can be secured is indicated by proposals contained in a resolution adopted at the Scarborough conference of the tory party.

The resolution urges legislation to:

Make illegal any strike called without a secret ballot of the members of the trade union affected.

Make mass picketing and the picketing of a private residence illegal. Make the audit of the national accounts of all trade unions compulsory under the supervision of a certified accountant.

Such measures, if enacted and enforced—and the manner in which the emergency powers act has been administered during the strike leaves no doubt of the intentions of the government-would make of the unions semi-official instruments of the government and place them in about the same positions as were the Russian trade unions under the czar.

The British labor movement will not stand for such oppressive measures unless its power of resistance has been broken. This is the first requirement for the success of the capitalist scheme.

With the knowledge that the rulers of Britain are getting ready for this kind of an attack, part of the general offensive against the working class, the struggle of the miners becomes for the labor movement a decisive action—truly a life and death struggle.

If the miners can be defeated British capitalism feels sure that the morale of the whole working class will be weakened sufficiently to permit it to consolidate its victory by the enactment of laws and can be dealt with as such by the state.

The miners are holding the first line of defense for the whole British labor movement. More than that, a defeat of the miners will strengthen the capitalist class the world over and certainly will not be without its effect on the struggle which the American coal miners face next spring.

But the stern resistance of the miners has astounded the world and aroused the admiration of the whole working class. For almost six months, suffering the most bitter privation, they have refused to be driven back to the pits.

British industry is at the lowest ebb in its history and the markets of British capitalism are being grabbed by greedy competitors. The miners, alone except for the generous donations of the Russian trade unions and the small contributions from the labor movements in capitalist countries, are beating the British ruling class.

Six months have passed since the leaders of the British labor movement brought about the desertion of the miners, but the miners

They must be given the financial aid that will enable them to make the last effort needed for victory.

There is at present no other cause which should be allowed to come between the British miners and the financial relief they need.

The losses suffered in membership, in working conditions, and in organizational positions, particularly in the hasic industries during this "prosperity" period have caused no comment from the labor leadership: not to speak of the failures to bring forward any aggressive measures to change

In Gary the K. K. K.-republican party held two great rallies. One of them in the heart of the Negro settlement, another in the white neighbor

STRIKE STRATEGY

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

(ARTICLE I.—Foreword.)

The DAILY WORKER is presenting to its readers a series of articles by William Z. Foster on one of the most vital subjects of the labor movement-Strike Strategy. The following article is the foreword and first of this series, which we believe no militant worker can afford to miss. The scarcity of literature on this important subject and the experience of Foster in the labor movement are enough to recommend these articles to any worker. Especially should they be placed in the hands of every progressive trade unionist. The ideas they contain must be come the property of the working class, a weapon in their The DAILY WORKER hopes its readers will aid this by intensified efforts at getting subscriptions and additional distribution.

THE reactionary officialdom of the trade unions travels constantly to the right. In following out its policy of "co-operation" with the employers, through the B. & O. plan, trade union capitalism, etc., it is rapidly casting aside even the last semblances of struggle against the employers. Consequently, the masses of workers, abandoned and betrayed by their old leadership, are being compelled to turn more and more to the left wing in the unions for leadership in their inevitable class warfare against the employers.

A whole series of strikes (Passaic, Furriers, I. L. G. W. U., etc.,) and of opposition movements in the unions (Machinists, Miners, etc.) indicates this tendency. As a result, the left wing has an urgent need to acquaint itself with the principles and practices of strike strategy, of the science of effective struggle by the trade unions.

The general question of strike strategy has received but little concentrated attention until within the last few years, that is, since the formation of the Red International of Labor Unions. Prior to that time the reformist trade union leaders, whose attention was fastened, not on making an effective fight against the employers, but on coming to agreement with them, gave very little thought to the development trade union program, but all linked up with the central of a scientific strike strategy. In fact, the first real discussion ever held on the matter in an international labor gathering took place in the 1924 congress of the R. I. L. U.

The question is highly complex. There is very little literature upon it in this or any other country. This pamphlet, which is a companion volume to my booklet entitled, 'Organize the Unorganized," is a modest beginning of such a literature in this country. It should be followed by more elaborate and detailed studies.

At the R. I. L. U. 1924 congress, Losovsky defined the three elements of policy, strategy and tactics as follows: "Policy lays down within the limits of the program the basic direction which the class must follow in order that its fighting capacity may be enhanced and in order to prepare it for the overthrow of the other class. Strategy determines the direction of the operation and the choice of the point to be attacked as part of the achievement of the chosen aim. Tactics provide the answer as to how to direct the battle at definite sections of the front."

In the present work this distinction is not made. The three elements of the subject are covered under the general head of strike strategy. The pamphlet is somewhat comprehensive, dealing with various aspects of the left wing question of how to wage strikes successfully.

Strike strategy varies widely from country to country and period to period. Its specific character depends upon the degree of economic development and of the sharpness of the class struggle in a given situation. The strike strategy necessary in a country in a revolutionary crisis differs very expanding capitalism. The strike strategy herein sketched is that best calculated to defend and advance the interests of the working class under present-day conditions in the United States.

Today, capitalism in the United States is strong and | Chicago, October 20, 1926.

growing. It is able to furnish work for the masses; it can concede such conditions to the upper layers of the working class, the skilled workers, as to keep them pretty well contented with the present capitalistic order of society. But this is a passing phase. Just as British capitalism, which was also once powerful and able to still the demands of the skilled workers with concessions, is now on the decline, so will American capitalism, however strong it may be now, go the same way downward because of the contradictions inherent in capitalist production and distribution.

The industries will shut down, great masses of workers will become chronically unemployed, their standards of living will be reduced; the concessions won from or given by the employers in the present period will then prove illusory and be swept away. The workers will be compelled to turn against capitalism, to organize their forces to put an end to the capitalist system and to establish the new proletarian order of society.

In the bitter struggles of that inevitable era the strike strategy will have to be quite different from and will be materially from that required in one with a flourishing and based upon a far more militant offensive than that possible in the workers' fight today. It is not within the province of this booklet to detail the strategy of those critical times, but to lay out practical lines for the conduct of our strike struggles now.
