The Fight for the Masses and TUUL Board RAID SAN PEDRO the Role of the Central Organ of Our Party

THE struggle for the correction of all opportunist errors is essen-tially a struggle for the masses. In the passing over from the trough in the class struggle to a period of sharp battles which take on more and more a revolutionary character as the wave of conflict rises, certain hesitant elements are at first swept along by its momentum but after a while begin to show their opportunist nature.

We confront in the Hoover conferences, the latest and greatest delopment of the campaign of the capitalist class to choke off all strikes and other forms of the class struggle, a complete united front of reaction ranging from Wall Street and its government to social reformism. Not only has a fascist atmosphere been created but important organizational steps have been taken to complete the union of "government and business."

In the revolutionary industrial mions the first task is the mobilization of the masses for the struggle against social-fascism but in all our unions a certain under-estimation of the necessity for this is to be noted. Even where there is formal acceptance of this necessity there is weakness and even failure in preparing such a serious struggle. In connection with the burning necessity for the broadening of the leadership of the unions and the drawing in and training of new forces the line of the Red International of Labor Unions seems to have been for agents of the bosses are doing his gotten in many instances.

As an inevitable consequence of this, there is developing in a number of revolutionary unions, or has already developed to the point where there is a crisis, a feeling of great dissatisfaction among the membership. In preparation for strikes, genuine mass mobilization is necessary and the strike committees and other organs of struggle have to be made actually representative of the workers involved in the struggle and its authority established as the decisive leadership. Unless this measure-one of the fundamental differences between reformist and revolutionary leadership-is carried out, suspicion and dissension replace proletarian discipline and the struggle against social-fascism in all its manifestations is greatly weakened.

The letter of the Red International of Labor Unions to the Cleveland convention of the Trade Upion Unity Convention last August said:

"Especially must the new unions in the U. S. A. base their organization work and strike strategy upon drawing the on work and strike strategy upon drawing the masses actively into the work and leadership. The conception of the unions as mer 'organizing cadres,' groups of leaders, whom the masses must bundly follow, must be disposed of once for all. The is must be built on the principle of democratic centralization. The unions must be mass organizations from which the leadership is built up automatically from below, especially the leadership of strike struggles, which are called by the revolutionary unions, for which properly functioning strike committees must pared organizationally in the most systematic manner, and be prepared organizationally in the most systematic manner, and 'led by means of developing strike committees elected by the man of the strikers from their own ranks."

No excuses can be accepted for failure to prepare for all struggles gainst occial-fascism, and general struggles for higher wages and better working conditions in this manner. Such strike committees have authority superior even to that of the executive of the revolutionary nions. Failure to utilise every effort for the building of such comnittees and their active functioning in the leadership of mass struggles a revolutionary weapon and play into the hands of social-

It is only by insisting on close study of new forms and methods of struggle by the leadership and membership of our party, and by actual creation of these new revolutionary weapons in the course of the sharpening struggles, that our Party can give leadership to our class. It is only by drawing new forces into leadership of all struggles by starting and maintaining a constant flow from the revolutionary reseroir of working class militancy into the unions and all leading committees, that mass resistance to the capitalist offensive can be organized.

TO FIGHT USSR After Provocation on Frontier, Seek to Start World War Red Army Halts Drive Stops 38 Miles Over Manchurian Line POLICE Reports from Harbin late Tuesday explode the story of alarm at the alleged "invasion" of the Red Army into Manchuria, Harbin sources acknowledging that the Red Army troops stopped only thirtyeight miles over the frontier, in pur-suing the Chinese forces that had, incited by imperialism, continually been raiding across the border into peaceful Soviet villages, killing Soviet citizens and forcing them to abandon their homes. After a vicious raid of this kind on Nov. 17, the Red Army of the Far East was ordered to make a general counter-attack to punish and disarm the raiders.

the U.S. A., can fulfill its function only if it calls the attention of the whole working class to failures to carry out the line of the Party in the all mass activities-and especially in basic mass organizations such as the unions. The Daily Worker must give a lead to the Party every day and this can be done best by constant attention to the concrete questions arising out of the work of our Party in the factories.

Our central organ has not given sufficient attention to these allimportant questions, and this has to be corrected. The correction must follow the line of the Comintern in the fight against opportunism in its various sections:

"The theoretical level of the Party membership will only be raised when the Communists' work in the factory becomes the question for theoretical discussion, when the Party newspaper puts the questions of the mass struggle sharply and in concrete form, with the firm determination to fight for a particular point, and ceases to cover up its inculation of passivity by the excessive use of exclamation marks."

Then there is the letter from a worker in California, who sent $17 to the "Drive to Rush the Daily South."

It follows:

"Dear Comrades:

"I sympathizs with the struggle of the wage slaves, both Negro d white in the South, and I appreciate the value and power of the Daily Worker to encourage these workers to resist the oppression by bosses through organization.

"I recall the effect that the first copy of the Daily Worker that I read had on me, about three years ago. "I'm still reading it, and read it almost line for line, too. I say it's a mighty weapon for the working class and want to help other workers get their first Dailys, too, if they can be inspired by it as much as I was.

sucrifies a little towards this campaign instead of waiting for others to do your share (as I too was inclined to do). "We'll never get anywhere that way; mail your contribution in today so the southern mill workers can get the Daily.

"I'd rather contribute this $17.50 to the "Drive to Rush the Daily than get a new suit of clothes that's 13 months overdue already. So here goes."

Workers, that's the sort of working class solidarity thats going to hasten the overthrow of the capitalist system. It's the spirit that will spur on the southern mill workers in their struggles under the hip of the National Textile Workers' Union.

It's the answer that all militant workers and working class groups must make to the appeals of the southern mill workers that the Daily Worker be rushed to them.

The Renegade United Front Against the Revolutionary Unions

PARTY LIFE

By EARL BROWDER.

WE have already pointed out the vicious attacks by the Lovestoneites against the Cleveland Unity Convention, which Gitlow called a "crime against the working class" in agreement with Green, Woll, Cannon & Co. It is not yet clear to all those, who formerly looked to Gitlow & Co. as "left" leaders, how completely this gentry has gone over to the enemy. Let us examine a few more facts.

In all the revolutionary unions the renegades are fighting against the building up of these unions, and are building a united front which includes all the renegades, and connects them up with the Muste movement and with sections of the already discredited bureaucracy. In the miners' union, the Lovestoneites (Mverscough, Vratarich) make an open assault against the union, carefully timed with that of Watt, who is headed toward the Lewis camp. Watt has his campaign organized and directed by the Cannonites (Swabeck, Angelo) who at the same time are connected with the Muste "progressives," while the latter are supporting Fishwick-Farrington. The whole crew-Lewis, Fishwick, Farrington, Howatt, Brophy, Myerscough, Watt, Angelo, Swabeck, Vratarich-have a complete united front on at least the main slogan, which is, "Down with Communist leadership in the Miners' Union."

But it is not only a practical united front. It has a solid base in common theories. These are, that the American working class is backward, that the movement must therefore also be backward, therefore we cannot build unions on the basis of the class struggle, therefore we must hook ourselves onto the tail of the Muste movement, therefore we must crawl by hook or crook into the A. F. of L. and be real quiet there about basic issues so as not to get thrown out.

Swabeck expressed this in "The Militant" of September 15, where he argues for a policy of "drawing the masses into the A. F. of L."; of affiliating "the new unions to the A. F. of L."; of uniting "the left wing with the progressive (Muste) movement." Gitlow expressed the same thing in his organ of Nov. 15, when he denounces the Cleveland Convention because it included in its program the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of a Workers' and Farmers' Government: for Citlow this is "pure and simple left sectarianism" (exactly the same judgment as that of Cannon and Lore!), and he quotes Lenin at great ength, to prove that because Communists must work in reactionary trade unions, therefore when Communists organize trade unions they must organize reactionary ones!

In the southern textile industry, Cannon solemnly proposes that the left wing "must take the initiative in proposing joint action" to the A. F. of L.; inasmuch as the A. F. of L. is the greatest exponent of rationalization, as the cure for all ills, Lovestone must logically endorse Cannon's proposal, for he (writing under the name of Dawson) finds the cause of the troubles in the textile industry generally, in the South and the whole world, in the lack of sufficient rationalization, the lagging behind in technical progress.

Both Cannon and Lovestone hark back to 1925, as the crystallizing int of their joint "correct" trade union policies. We take up the old 1925 resolution, which was rejected by the VI Plenum of ECCI. and sure enough, there is to be found there the 1929 policy of the renegades, in the following paragraphs:

"In the declaration of policy for the ILGWU convention, the CEC statement declared the basic policy of the Party to be 'the firm consolidation of the left wing on the basis of our left wing program. Efforts must be made to make the convention discussion an ideological campaign to convince the progressives and win them for our program.'

"The opposition policy presented to the CEC stated that our fundamental policy shall be "to completely smash the reactionary machine and to take over the administration of the union.'

"These two statements bring out in striking contrast the correct policy as stated by the CEC and the incorrect policy stated in the opposition resolution, which has been the policy which has influenced our trade union work in the past.'

Lovestone does not yet admit the identity of his program with that of the other renegades, but still keeps on his camouflage. Cannon admits it, but explains that he stands for the same thing from different motives. One of the rarest gems of Trotskyist casuistry yet produced America is the result. Through the pen of Schachtman he writes:

"His (Lovestone's) 'demand may appear superficially to be similar to ours. But . . . when we demand party democracy or a correct trade anion policy it is for the purpose of strength. ening the working class Bolshevik elements in the movement. When it is demanded by Lovestone, it is for the purpose of gaining free play for interests alien to the working class." Accepting the complete correctness of the description of Lovestone's aim as that of "gaining free play for interests alien to the working class." we leave it to the metaphysicians and mystics to explain how the purity of intentions (!) of the Trotskyists makes their common program with that same Lovestone any less injurious to the workers.

The New Reactionary Civil War and the Prospects of the Revolution in China

A. F. OF L.: "SHAKE! WE DID A GOOD JOB!"

3. THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL CONTENT AND PRESENT ALIGNMENT OF REACTIONARY ·FORCES AND THE NEW

CIVIL WAR IN CHINA.

EARLY in July this year, Comrade Chiu Wito gave us a very clear picture of the contradictions in China that were bound to bring about a civil war in the near future. He said:

"The background of the militarist wars in China can be described as the following: (1) the struggle between British, Japanese and American imperialists for spheres of influence in China and the right to control the central government; (2) the struggle between the various militarist groups for territories, representing the combined interests of commercial capitalists in the local markets and the gentry and landlords; (3) the struggle of the Shanghai national bourgeoisie (including banking capitalists and compradores, and those capitalists of the big industrial and commercial banks) for the control of all the markets of the nation, demanding the local markets (such as Hankow, Canton, Tsingtao, Tientsin, and Dairen, etc.) to abolish their semiindependent character and obey Shanghai, and thus to bring about the unification of the national market; hence the conflict with the local militarists. These three causes of civil wars in China are closely related to each other." (Taken and translated from a Chinese pamphlet entitled "International Struggle Against Opportunism.") Two months after the above words of Comrade Chiu were written, the opening battles of the civil war of reaction were fought. Nobody who was familiar with the situation in China was surprised: everybody who has an interest in Chinese politics was patiently waiting for the curtain to rise. The general aggravation of international and internal contradictions in China made the war inevitable in the nearest future. The worsening of famine conditions in the northwestern provinces, the territory under Feng Yu-Hsiang's control, with little or no prospect of relief, presented a grave food problem for Feng Yu Hsiang's army and thus gave the "Christian General" & strong impetus to descond southward at the earliest possible moment. The prolonging of the "Sino-Soviet Crisis" weakened Nanking's position and thus strengthened the position of Feng Yu Hsiang and, at the same time, alienated Chang Hsueh-liang's (the Manchurian war lord) support of Nanking. All of these factors, though not of equal importance, contributed to make the civil war come at this particular time.

ceed along the line of pure bourgeois development. Hence, the civil war in China can never be a progressive war, not even from the point of view of Nanking. The Chiang clique is not a compact body representing the independent bourgeoisie of China; like the anti-Nanking bloc, it is also a bloe, an allied group, composed of Chiang Kai-shek himself, representing the Shanghai bourgeoisie controlling Kiangsu and Chekiang, and the provincial militarists of Anhui, Kiangsi, Hupeh, Hunan, Fukian, and part of Honan. Such civil wars of reaction, even if Nanking comes out again victorious, can never bring about the real unity of China! The Tenth Plenum of the Communist International has diagnosed the Chinese situation quite correctly in the phrase "the interests of the ruling clique in China are diametrically opposed to the interests of the national unification of China." (Inprecorr, Vol. 9, No. 46, p. 975.)

CHIANG KAI-SHEK AND AMERICAN IMPERIALISM.

The dual character of the National Government at Nanking to a large extent also serves to explain the sometimes wavering foreign policy of Nanking. Although Chiang Kai-shek chiefly leans upon American imperialism, the fact that the Yangtze valley is primarily a British sphere of influence together with other circumstances oblige him to flirt not infrequently with his British and Japanese masters, and sometimes he doesn't even hesitate to "pass a night" with either two. The capitulation in the Tsinan case, the recognition of the infamous Nishihara loan, and the Simo-British naval agreement are some of the well known products of such "overnight unions." But, by and large, Chiang Kai-shek is primarily pro-American. Of course, Chiang Kai-shek's occasional overtures to Great Britain and Japan weakens America's confidence in him. However, no wise master expects complete fidelity from his servant. So long as he does not resent the master's approaches and carries out his wishes, some kind of support from the master can be assured. Thus we see, despite Chiang Kaishek's infidelities, America still gives him help in his recent trouble. The American bourgeoisie realizes that it cannot win the Chinese market from England or Japan without a war, and she does not hesitate to start the struggle, on a smaller scale, by helping out her agent in China. The lifting of the arms embargo which makes it legal for foreign powers to sell arms to China, but only through the central government. naturally greatly strengthens Chiang Kai-shek. The recent order from Nanking of the largest consignment of army aeroplanes that China has over made before in any foreign country is of great significance since, owing to the poor arms of the opposing forces, this may be of decisive importance to the outcome of the war. It may be mentioned here that almost the whole air force of China, under Chiang Kai-shek's direction, is organized with American capital (the Curtis interests) and under the command of the famous American adventurer, Albert Hall, masquerading as "General Chang" in China. The New York Times of November 1, carries the news that "the Nanking government is now negotiating with the American Oil Company, attempting to raise $10,000,000 Mexican ($5,000,000 gold) advance tax payments by giving a 20 per cent rebate." We do not know yet the outcome of the negotiations, but the very fact that, negotiations are going on certainly proves that American imperialists have not yet given up hope of betting on Chiang Kai-shek. The editorials of two of the leading capitalist papers in America also betray this attitude on the part of the imperialists. The New York Times (Oct. 16, 1929) said: "whether or not the National Government be-as its supporters assert-the only hope of China, it has succeeded, longer than any of its predecessors, in maintaining a semblance of order in China." The New York Herald-Tribune Oct. 13, 1929) is even more outspoken. It writes: "Chiang thus far has seemed to symbolize civil peace and national unity; that is why the successive revolts against his government have collapsed." Of course, this over-confidence of American imperialism in Chiang Kai-shek does not mean that if Chiang Kai-shek goes to the dogs, American influence in China will go with him. Imperialists can always find new agents when the old one has served its turn. But in the meantime, I think, the evidence at hand warrants the conclusion that American imperialism has not yet abandoned hope in Chiang Kai-shek and is still supporting hiro.

On a clear warm day in the late autumn, the Tashkent train came to a stop at the little station between Samara and Buzuluk, Several mujiks jumped down from the cars to the platform. The train made only a short stop. When the cars went on again with a busy clatter of wheels, there lay on the hand frozen gravel near the tracks piled up sacks of grain marked with crosses and bars and crooked uneven letters.

On two sacks, each two to three poods in weight, was written in indellible pencil: Mich Dodon.

A husky, sunburnt lad in a big, torn cap approached the sacks, tried the knots earefully, felt the sacks themselves, and blew out his brown unwashed cheeks complacently.

Across the clear, lofty sky floated a blue-gray cloud, covering part of the sun and casting a light shadow.

The husky, sunburnt lad stood there, his feet, wrapped in rags, spread wide apart, mujik fashion: calmly and gravely he surveyed the two sacks, bound securely with double knots, drew in a breath of keen autumn air, coughed, and shook his head.

"How cold it is here! Must be frost already, nights . . ." This was Mishka.

In Tashkent he had roamed for a long time about the market places, slept under hedges, lain around by muddy canals. When h fell sick of dysentery, he thought he would surely die.

Day after day he was tormented by diarrhea. His tortured entraile seemed to be coming out of him, the result of the rotten apples and peaches he had picked up from the ground and eaten. But even in those days he was not destroyed. He lived through everything, endured everything-lice and dirt and dysentery. . . . He sold his knife and his belt, gathered rotten apples from the ground, begged for alms. And then one day he had enough of it, it grew hateful to him. He would never get any seed that way! And he must have seed with which to sow his land and save the farm. . .

He went to work in the gardens of a rich Sart, then he met some Buzuluk mujiks, and went out with them on the steppe. He threshed wheat, cut weeds, earned two sacks of grain-four poods apiece. Two poods he gave for the journey home, some he ate on the way, not wanting to beg any longer, and so returned with other mujiks to his native district

There was no one from Lopatino village at the station.

Two carts came by from a neighboring village, and the other mujiks began loading their sacks of grain. Mishka said to the driver: "Take mine along too, I'll pay."

"It will be too heavy," objected the driver.

"That's not heavy," said Mishka, "six poods-no more. Drive slowly, there's no hurry. You have to pass our village anyway."

The horses toiled along, their bony backs bent, the wheels began their familiar creaking, the cart of twisted linden twigs shook and groaned, and the sacks, bursting with heavy yellow grain, moved slowly up the narrow field path into the transparent stillness of the description fields.

Mishka walked with the mujiks behind the cart, looked greedily about at the low hills and the valleys and the rabbit holes, and thought of his mother:

"Is she alive?"

His troubled eyes roamed over the dead naked fields. He picked up a hard clod of earth from the unsown acres and sighed: "I wonder what it costs to buy a horse here now?"

When they reached his village, Mishka was confronted by the empty, silent izba, with the greenish glass in its little window-panes. Through the open gateway he could see the empty courtyard, evergrown with weeds. Sting-nettles grew tall against the fence, and the yoke lay blackened and forgotten on the ground.

His mother did not come to meet him.

The drivers carried Mishka's sacks of wheat into the courtyard, and lay them down on the banked-up earth beneath the windows. But still no one came to meet him.

His heart shook, all grew dark before his eyes.

Old grandfather Ignatye came creeping out of his gateway. he shaded his eyes with his hands, stared at the cart with the sacks on it, and called in a weak voice:

"Help is come-for whom? Mishka paid the drivers with grain out of his sacks, then ran over to the shriveled, trembling old man. "Grandfather, what's happened to my people?" Grandfather Ignatye stared at him with dim, vacant eyes, fingering his beard with a trembling hand. "Wait, wait, where do you come from?" Two women drew near, felt the sacks lying beneath the windows, picked up two grains that had fallen to the ground and said slowly "Little father! Look what he has brought along!" In the empty, darkened izba, on a naked bed, beneath the dead eyes of two icons, lay his sick mother. Yashka and Fyedka were dead. Mishka bent above his sick mother and said softly: "Mamma, wake up. 1'm back!" His mother was freightened, joyful, moved her lips weakly: "Oh, God, Mishenka!" "Ive brought bread, Mamma. For you!" From his pocket he drew a hard piece of white bread, and a hand ful of dried apples, and laid them in his mother's cold hand. "Take them, Mamma. Eat!" "You're alive, little son?"

But if Cannon and Lovestone find it necessary, in the interests of "division of labor," to maintain organizational separation from one another, their old friend Lore is not so bashful. He gently chides them (in Volkszeitung of Nov. 23) for "constantly defending themselves against the accusation that they are in any way related" with Lore. and says:

"The three tendencies expelled from the CP are of one opinion in all important questions; in the main they defend the same tactical and principle standpoint. . . . Cannon-Lovestone may attempt to depy their 'poor relation.'"

Yes, it is true that the renegades all have the same program in entials, especially on the practical questions, such as the trade union work. This reflects an underlying unity of theory. These facts are coming clear to all. Lovestone-Cannon-Lore rise and fall together. and their destiny is concurrently bound up with that of Muste and Wm. Green.

CLEVELAND CHALLENGES DETROIT!

THE quota for District Six (Cleveland), and District Seven (Detroit) is 400 new members each. A few days ago the District Buro of District Six discussed the mmehership campaign and decided to challenge the comrades of District Seven. Now we read in the "Daily Worker" (Nov. 16) that the Detroit comrades have challenged Pittsburgh District. Why look for an "enemy" hundreds of miles away when we are at your gates and are ready to fight with you? Are the Detroit comrades afraid to enter with us in revolutionary rivalry?

We are out to defeat Detroit District. The field of our operation is very extensive. In our district we have millions of workers. Our territory takes it Ohio, and parts of W. Virginia and Kentucky. In this territory we find great automobile plants, steel and chemical factories, some of the largest mines, and the center of rubber industry.

We are determined to root our Party in these gigantic factories to win hundreds of new recruits in these basic industries. After this embership drive we expect to have an entirely new basis for our Party in this district. We hope to have the overwhelming majority of membership in shop nuclei by Febbuary 10.

In this district we also have tens of thousands of Negro workers. They are the most exploited and oppressed section of the working class. They are massed in big factories. They are forced to do the hardest and least paid work. Therefore, we are concentrating our attention upon drawing the most advanced revolutionary Negro workers into our ranks during this membership drive. We have already dispatched Comrade E. Williams, a young fighter, into the mining section of Eastern Ohio and W. Virginia to work for the Party among the Negro miners.

WHAT_NEW YORK ASLEEP?

Our young comrades have challenged the New York district of the League to increase their membership proportionally, but they received no reply. It means that the New York comrades have accepted their defeat even before entering the fight. Our League organizer tells us unofficially that they already have 25 new members in the League, and at least one new shop nucleus. They have six organizers in the field.

We repeat, in the spirit of Revolutionary Rivalry, we challenge t Seven to secure more new members, to build more shop nuclei. more new subscribers for the "Daily Worker." We are out J. ADAMS.

The reports about the war are so confusing that it is not possible to examine in detail with a fair degree of accuracy the military progress of the warfare. Fortunately, such an examination is not necessary here. The important things to know are the political and social content of the groups involved and their part in the march of events toward the Chinese revolution.

A. THE CHIANG CLIQUE AND THE NANKING REGIME.

The present civil war is the result of a revolt against Nanking, a combined attack by the anti-Nanking block on the domination of the "Central" Government by Chiang Kai-shek and his associates, the Chiang clique. Therefore, we will begin our analysis with a brief survey of the Nanking group and its regime.

THE SHANGHAI NATIONAL BOURGEOISIE AND THE CHIANG KAI-SHEK CLIQUE.

It is true that Nanking serves as the agent of American imperialism and at the same time represents the interests of Shanghai bourgeoisie. It is also true that Nanking's tottering existence signifies, as Comrade Chiu said, "The struggle of the Shanghai national bourgeoisie for the control of all the markets of the nation, demanding the local markets (such as Hankow, Canton, Tsingtao, Tientsin, and Darien, etc.), to abolish their semi-independent character and obey Shanghai, and thus bring about the unification of the national market." But here it should be made clear that Nanking is not a real national governa ment. It is practically built upon the support of only a few provinces in the lower Yangtze valley. While bearing the name and having the legal status of a national government, Nanking, ever since its beginning, has always the character of a local government. "Although Chiang Kai-shek represents the Shanghai bourgeoisie, the Shanghai bourgeoisie is grown up together and mixed with certain landlords and comporadores. The fact that Chiang Kai-shek must depend upon the support of Chu Pei-Te (of Kiangsi), Ho Ying Chin (of Hupeh), Chen Tia-yuan (of Anhui) and even Ho Chen (of Hunan' is an evidence of this situation!" (from Chiu Wito's pamphlet "International Struggle Against Opportunism," published in Chinese.) In the present conflict the alliance of Chiang Kai-shek with Chen Ming-shu of Rwangtung is a very clear illustration of this point. Chen Ming-shu, with the slogan "Kwangtung for the Kwangtungnese" is almost a pure type of a provincial militarist, representing the semi-feudalists and commercial capitalists. Indeed, the Chinese national bourgeoisie, which is more or less concentrated at Shanghai, is not yet an independent force sufficiently strong to organize a real national government for China and it can never be strong enough to do this! Since the Nanking Government is not a real national bourgeois government and must rest upon the support of local forces, it cannot and never really did pro-

Then he went slowly around to the dirty courtyard, overgrown with weeds. His eyes fell on some dried horse's dung, and he remembered about the horse. He must get one. He saw a hen's nest, with two feathers lying in the blackened straw, and sighed:

"The whole place will have to be built up again. . . . No horses. No chickens."

A sparrow that had escaped alive lit on the broken-down roof of the cowshed. It hopped along the beam, ruffled its feathers, and looked at Mishka with twinkling eyes.

Mishka looked thoughtfully at the sparrow. He lifted the blackened yoke from the earth and put it away in a corner. Then he went ever to the sacks of wheat.

"It doesn't matter. There's no sense in crying. I'll fix everything up again. . . ."
