

For God's sake — there's a lady present!

No lady—or man or child, for that matter—should have to witness the gutter gaieties sponsored by the nation's leadership today. Witness the A-bomb experiments in Nevada, sending radio-active clouds to the four winds; the Justice Dept. (see right) trying to scrape the muck off its witnesses; a legislative committee in New York (see p. 9) trying to make sure that persecuted Americans will get no defense at all. And that 50% Congress pay rise! Lady, close your eyes.

SEATO parley a 'farce' nobody'll die for Chiang

By Kumer Goshal

SECY. DULLES was back last week from a whip-round of poverty-stricken S.E. Asian countries. It had mainly served to highlight their peoples' lack of enthusiasm for Washing-ton's brand of "free world aid," and its attempt to line them up behind Chiang. In that context the mustering of weak, corrupt Pakistan and Thailand as the only mainland Asian countries foregathered with Western powers for the S. E. Asian Treaty Alliance conference was embarrassing to press commenta-

At the conference, Bangkok—under the eye of former ambassador to Guatemala Peurifoy—was picked as SEATO's headquarters; no economic aid was forthcoming for the three Asian members; chief stress was placed on SEATO's job to fight "subversives" with the sid of "a ton-flight [U.S.] security SEATO's job to fight "subversives" with the aid of "a top-flight [U.S.] security man, presumably someone from the FBI" (N.Y. Herald Tribune, 2/25). NYHT's Homer Bigart said the conference had worked out "a permanent SEATO which will have no muscle and no pocket book"; the York (Pa.) Gazette called it a "farce"; Dulles expressed satisfaction.

RELUCTANT DANCERS: Throughout S. E. Asia Washington's attempts to win a ring of "free world" friends by military "partnerships," without any move to end their peoples' poverty, continued to crumble. C. L. Sulzberger (N.Y. Times, 2/26) said Dulles' "ultimate plan" was to tie all the U.S. pacts in the Pacific area "into a neat bundle," bringing Japan into SEATO and into a pact with Chiang and S. Korea.

But there were "basic difficulties."

But there were "basic difficulties." All SEATO members balked at Dulles' efforts to link them with defense of Chiang. In Japan's Feb. 27 elections, all political parties had campaigned on a political parties had campaigned on a platform of negotiations with the U.S.S.R. and China. The tally gave Premier Hatoyama's party 185 seats, the party of more pro-U.S. ex-Premier Yoshida 112 (a serious slump), right-and left-wing Socialists 156, the Communists 2. Hatoyama said that proposed moves to amend the MacArthur constitution, which renounces war, must now be deferred "for some time" since he could not command the necsince he could not command the nec-essary % majority in the 467-seat parliament. Japan, Sulzberger noted,

. displays remarkable reluctance rearm. . [Although] we pay the per and therefore feel entitled to piper and therefore teer characteristics and the strategic tune . . . we can't make everybody dance."

TIGHTROPE: Dulles also visited:

• Cold-war-neutral BURMA's Premier U Nu, who relayed to him a proposal from China to discuss with an unofficial U.S. mission the case of the imprisoned U.S. flyers;

• LAOS, French Indo-China, where the government has been conferring with leadars of the Eather to the conferring with leadars of the conferring with the conferring wit

THE INFORMER RACKET

Matusow's publishers urge Congress probe of the Justice Dept.

SINCE late January, when Harvey Matusow placed on public record under oath his confession that he lied deliberately and habitually during his career as a government informer, the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee has been straining to prove that Matusow was truthful then, is lying now. Last week Angus Cameron and Albert E. Kahn, publishers of Matusow's forth-coming book False Witness, made another effort to have the inquiry broad-ened. They sent each member of the Senate an advance copy with a letter suggesting "a thorough investigation of all facts relating to the book and its disclosures . . . by some governmental body other than the Dept. of Justice, which is itself seriously implicated in some of Matusow's charges."

The publishers pointed out:

The publishers pointed out:

"In connection with his activities as a paid government witness, Matusow has made affidavits to the effect that he gave false testimony under oath at two Federal trials. According to one of Matusow's affidavits, he was coached to testify falsely by Asst. U.S. Atty. Roy Cohn. Matusow's book also recounts other of his operations in the service of the Justice Dept."

SUGGESTIONS: The letter cited as a precedent for such an investigation the Senate Select Committee probe in 1924 "into the activities of Atty. Gen. Harry M. Daugherty and malpractices in the

NEW YORK, N.Y.

Recently in the neighborhood toy steers I noticed on sale a set of plastic ships, planes and locomolives. Our magnanimous leaders in tives. Our magnanimous leaders in Washington must have gotten wind of this for they are distributing larger war-type replicas of the same to Chiang Kai-shek, who has a peculiar fondness for such "toys." This bigger bang for Chiang foreign policy can lead to no good. If Chiang would like to play with ships and planes he ought to retire from public life and concentrate his attention on the plastic variety. I, for one, would be glad to help him start such a hobby.

The disclosures by Harvey Matusow make it clear that perjured testimony has been used in obtaining convictions of innocent persons now in prison, Matusow appeared as a witness for the Government in the trial in which my husband was one of the defendants. Now he swears he lied on the witness stand. As you know, two U.S. Supreme Court Justices. I am confident that the truth will prevail, in time. But time is not on the side of my husband.

I appeal to you as a person concerned with human decency and kindness to urge upon Atty. Gen. Brownell that he recommend that my husband's sentence be reduced to the time already served, and thus give him a chance to live. The Smith Act does not demand the death penalty.

May I correct the record of your account of the discussion between John T. McManus and myself as published in Feb. 28 GUARDIAN?

1) I did not say that "the formation of a farmer-labor party would be the key to resistance" to war and fascism. The position of the Communist Party is that the united resistance to war and fascism can and must be organized NOW—without waiting for the formation of a new party. Our party holds that precisely out of today's united struggles for peace, democracy, labor's rights and civil rights will emerge tomorrow's new political formation—a labor-farmer party.

2) The story might leave the impression that my party has no position when both major parties offer reactionary candidates. My opening text specifically a sated that we supported the present ALP policy "to run candidates where and when no alternative between reactionary candidates exists."

REPORT TO READERS

ARE YOUR ACTIVITIES NEWS FOR THE GUARDIAN? If so, are you sending us reports? Are things going on in your community that GUARDIAN readers elsewhere might like to know about? If so, there is generally only one way we can get the facts-through you.

Don't take it for granted (unless you know positively) that some other reader is keeping us filled in; he probably isn't. Our weekly mail is one of the best batches in the business, but as you can see from the accompanying Mailbag columns, few letters deal with local news.

Here's a case in point: at a recent New York meeting of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, some 500 people were very interested to hear tell of a one-man battle being waged by a 60-year-old carpenter in Birmingham, Ala., against that city's "subversive" registration ordinance. The authorities, searching a rooming-house for quite other reasons, found in his room some books they decided were "subversive." The culprit they were searching for got away, of course, but the carpenter was taken in for failing to register as a subversive. taken in for failing to register as a subversive.

His lawyer said he ought to plead guilty and register, but the 60-yead-old libertarian said: "I'm goin' in there and read 'em the Bill of Rights."

Anyway, it was a fight which some Birmingham people thought needed support, so they sent some of the details to the ECLC's Clark Foreman, whose activities they had read the ECLC's Clark Foren

WELL, WE THINK THAT'S JUST FINE, but while you readers in Birmingham were about it, why didn't you send the details of this case to the GUARDIAN? (And if we've got the facts mixed, or if you think all of us might like to know the outcome of this fracas, why not send us a full report right now?)

No news is bad news—from our point of view, at least. It means (a) that there is nothing going on in your part of the world on the peace, jobs, rights and liberties front; or (b) that you're not concerned enough to write us about it.

WE BELIEVE THAT the tide of reaction is turning and the people are beginning to reclaim their democratic heritage on all sorts of levels. So we want news of attacks in your locality upon civil rights and liberties, on labor and housing and rent situations—but above all we want news of how people, any kinds of people, are getting together to defeat them. If the problem your group or community faced was solved, others want to know how you solved it. The big news services rarely report such things. If your local papers do, that's a head-start for you; just send us the clippings with a covering memo. And don't forget to follow up. We need newspaper cartoons too.

HOW ECONOMIC ROYALISTS CREATE STAGNANT WORLD MARKET

perpetual prosperity for America Debunking the myth of Earlier articles in this series (GUARDIAN, 1/10, 24, 31) showed that behind Washington's stress on "competitive co-existence," Asian "aid" projects, etc., is U. S. big business' growing need to export capital as fat investment opportunities begin to dry up at home. Foreign investment for profit was demonstrated to be a system whereby advanced capitalist countries drain the wealth of undeveloped countries and block their industrialization. The solution to undeveloped countries' problems was shown to lie not in money itself—whether in the form of private investment, loans, gifts, etc.—but, in economic and social organization.

By Tabitha Petran

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS after the onset of the Great Depression, U.S. capitalists claim to have found the key to "perpetual presperity." Such prosperity, in their view, does not preclude recessions and unemployment, the rise and in their view, does not preclude reces fail of stock markets, disappointments and setbacks of the business cycle—phenomena from which they usually suffer little. But it does rule out major economic collapse, and presupposes what Business Week (1/1) called "a great age of expansion led by the U.S." Behind the so-called New Optimism, BW found (2/5) "a strengthening faith that the expanding U.S. economy will that the expanding U.S. economy will be able to overcome its own problems and those of the free world."

Central to this faith is a conception of the undeveloped countries—34 of the "free world"—as a vast and ready market for American goods and capital

he U.S., but not movie actresses!" sell baseball Sultan players in the exports; their 1.2 billion inhabitants as so many "prospective customers

STRANGLED BY SYSTEM: This modera mythology has won wide currency, influencing even some progressive thinking. The reality is that undeveloped countries do not constitute such a market, nor their inhabitants, such prospective customers. Great as their needs may be, they lack the means to buy, and economic organization to sup-port, great imports of American goods. The very system of foreign investment for profit, which is now looked upon as the "key" to avert economic collapse in the UrS., has strangled the potential markets of these countries.

For foreign investment for profit disrupts old economic relations, destroys the prevailing internal markets in undeveloped countries; and—because it drives for monopolized preserves for the foreign capitalist—blocks economic expansion, hence the development of new internal markets.

STUCK ECONOMIES: In 1940 William Brandt wrote an article brilliantly forecasting post-World War II developments in China and reviewing the state of countries where foreign investment has disintegrated the old economy, making it too narrow for the population's subsistence, and prevented the tion's subsistence, and prevented the development of a new internal market. He described such countries as "stuck at the stage of transition" between preat the stage of transition" between pre-capitalism and capitalism. Since for-eign capitalism constantly tries to step up the rate of tribute, their economic status sooner or later becomes insup-portable. Under these circumstances their peoples more and more look to anti-feudal and anti-imperialist revo-lution to effect industrialization (develop the internal market).

Undeveloped countries "stuck at the stage of transition"-unable to industrialize—have not been integrated into the world market. They pay economic tribute to *the advanced countries (GUARDIAN, 1/17), and may serve as dumping grounds for farm and other surpluses; but they provide no expansion of the world market. History boys furtherware that their progress. shows, furthermore, that their progres-sive impoverishment under this enor-mously lucrative system of tribute mously lucrative system of treannot be continued indefinitely.

CAPITALISTS' DILEMMA: On the CAPITALISTS' DILEMMA: On the other hand, if a country does make the transition to the level of capitalism, it begins to suffer—from the viewpoint of foreign capitalists—from "too high a degree of industrialization:" too high, that is, for the profitability of foreign investment. The gap between the undeveloped and the advanced country is narrowed, the possibility of economic tribute therefore reduced, and its lure for foreign investors dimmed.

Economic royalists are caught in this basic contradiction. Expansion of the world market is necessary to their system since it is in the nature of capitalism to produce on a continually ex-panding scale. Such expansion requires expansion of the internal markets of undeveloped countries. This, in turn, requires increased productivity, hence their industrialization. Capital export could effect such industrialization only if it were so huge—and done in such a way—as to lift the undeveloped country's economy from semi-feudelism to way—as to fift the undeveloped country's economy from semi-feudalism to capitalism. But if this were done, its products would begin to compete with those of the advanced country, and profit rates would be lowered for the foreign capitalists.

NO ALTERNATIVE: In the abstract, the foreign capitalists would appear to have a choice of these alternatives:

1) To protect their rate of profit by assuring control over the undeveloped country's economy of a type which prevents industrialization;

2) To aid these countries' industri-alization so that their internal markets will expand—this, in the hope that even with a lower profit rate, the total volume of profits will increase.

But, in fact, only the first "alternative" is consistent with the nature of tive" is consistent with the nature of monopoly, with the way monopolies operate. Therefore the economic royalists operate, in reality, according to the first and this prevents the second—that is, industrialization.

In the modern world, industrialization—in this sense of developing the internal market—is the necessary basis for national independence. Under these circumstances, it is hampered and hindered until national independence is achieved. In fact, it can be accomplished only under conditions of national independence and abolition of the system of economic tribute.

THE WATERSHED: The 1929 forms an historical watershed in the relations of advanced to industrially backward countries. Puring the depresbackward countries. Puring the depression years, capital export virtually ceased, reflecting: 1) disintegration of the advanced countries' internal markets and their inability to expand the internal markets of undeveloped countries; 2) the fact that the world's undeveloped to the countries of t developed areas were mapped, scanned, divided among the great powers and offered no new fields of tribute. Capital offered no new fields of tribute. Capital export has never regained the role it played in the earlier period.

After World War II, U.S. economic royalists directed their huge accumulations of capital largely into armaments. They sought to compensate for the relatively small amount of capital export to undeveloped areas by stepping up the rate of tribute³; by militarizing capital exports as in the Korean War; and by establishing control over—in order to exact economic tribute from—weaker capitalist economies, principally the metropolitan countries of W. Europe. This latter was a primary objective of the huge foreign aid program.

STAGNANT SATELLITES: One of its

STAGNANT SATELLITES: One of its results was to block a number of capi-talist W. European countries from turning toward socialism. The peoples of these countries had emerged from the war determined to make the social and economic changes necessary to avert another such catastrophe and permit economic expansion. As foreign investment for profit tends to freeze undeveloped countries "at the stage of transition" between pre-capitalism and transition" between pre-capitalism and capitalism, so the U.S. economic royalists' drive for monopolistic advantages in weaker capitalist countries froze a number of them "at the stage of transition" from capitalism to socialism. That is, prevented them from breaking through the barriers of capitalism to begin socialist development. This paralysis of their economies permitted their reduction to semi-satellite, dependent status. Prime examples of such "stuck" countries are France and Italy where economic stagnation has been a permanent phenomenon for 25 years.

France's internal market is contracting. Its iron production is below that rance's internal market is contracting. Its iron production is below that of 1913; steel production barely at, and manufacturing production below, the 1929 level. French industry is operating at roughly 70% of capacity, although at least 15% of that capacity is engaged in arms production. Real wages are but half of pre-war; agricultural income has shrunk in the past decade.

France's political instability—its present government is the 21st since the war—mirrors the weakness of French capitalism, kept in power only by virtue of U.S. domination, and its inability to govern. Ex-Premier Mendes-France's economic reform program, touted as a step toward restoration of French capi-talism's power, barely scratched the tansm's power, barely scratched the surface. Yet even such a program could not be implemented. French economic expansion needs basic social and economic reform which U.S. economic royalists desperately seek to prevent. To a greater or lesser degree, a number of other "free world" countries are in the same fix. the same fix.

'He's trying to invent a clock that got a ready market with the reaction-aries in the world."

SELF-MADE CRISIS: Crucial for the U.S. program for W. Europe (to exact tribute and block the road to socialism) was the development of W. Germany tribute and block the road to socialism) was the development of W. Germany as the pivot of its military and control plans. This required putting W. Germany back on its feet economically, with the result that it became competitive not only with W. European countries but with the U.S. This has contributed to the intensified competition for markets, not expansion of markets. Thus, U.S. economic royalists may dream of "an age of expansion"—but the reality their system and its restrictive policies have created is a stagnant world market, which will disintegrate. They may annex this or that country to their system of economic tribute; for example, the new Turkey-Iraq "defense" pact—pulling Iraq out of the Arab League and tying it to the Greece-Turkey-Iran-Pakistan satellite grouping—is a major victory over British interests. But they will not in so doing expand the world market.

Growth is not something for the future; it must begin now. But in terms of immediate realities the lack of expansion in the world market indicates of immediate realities the lack of expansion in the world market indicates that there is no perspective in that market for averting economic crisis. Future articles will discuss the socialist world market, and the meaning for the U.S. of these economic realities.

The result of this three-year effort

The result of this three-year effort is The Atom Spy Hoax. It is by long odds the most challenging (and most fact-crammed) arraignment of fraud and frameup by our government and its allies to come between book covers time the Cold War began. Fortunately since the Cold War began. Fortunately for its thesis, it reaches the public at the moment when the parade of recanthe moment when the parade of recantation by government frameup; artists is beginning to form. The proofs of its thesis are piling up independently.

The question is, not whether William Reuben's thesis can be proved in every detail. It is whether any or enough of us will have the courage to accept for ourselves and propound to others the hateful probability that our government has been engaged for ten years ernment has been engaged for ten years in a monstrous hoax, bringing hurt to thousands and death to two, destroying liberty and peace to preserve a rotting system and hold back progress.

Greenglass-Gold-Fuchs

The chief witness against the late Ethel and Julius Rosenberg was David Greenglass, Mrs. Rosenberg's brother. David testified that while an Army sergeant assigned to the Los Alamos atomic project in 1944-45, he gave atomic information to his sister and brother-in-law for transmission to an agent of the U.S.S.R. Greenglass' adagent of the U.S.S.R. Greenglass' admissions of his own espionage activities were said by the government to have been forthcoming following his arrest on infomation provided by one Harry Gold, a self-styled Soviet spy for 15 years. The government said it trapped Gold through testimony given to the FBI in a British jail by Klaus Emil Julius Fuchs. German-born British sci-Julius Fuchs, German-born British scientist employed during the war at Los Alamos and a self-confessed spy.

THE TESTIMONY: The story as was testified to at the Rosenberg trial was that Gold visited Fuchs in Santa Fe, N.M., and then visited the Greenglasses at Albuquerque, where he identified himself with a portion of a Jell-O tified himself with a portion of a Jell-O box to which the Greenglasses supplied a matching portion. Gold testified he got his part of the Jell-O box from one Yakovlev, a Soviet official in New York. Greenglass testified he got his portion from Julius Rosenberg.

The Atom Spy Hoax contends that:

Gold never laid eyes on Greenglass until they met as witnesses against the Rosenbergs.

Fuchs never laid eyes on Gold glass until they met as witnesses against the Rosenbergs.

• Fuchs never laid eyes on Gold—and never said he did. Gold was cooperating with the FBI for almost a week before they ever talked to Fuchs; furthermore Gold had been questioned by the FBI and had appeared before a Grand Jury as early as 1947. J. Edgar Hoover lied when he said Gold was found out on the basis of a description given by Fuchs.
• Greenglass in fact never possessed any atomic information, but instead fell afoul of the FBI because he stole some uranium while assigned at Los Alamos. His wife and brother have stated that he stole uranium and threw it into the East River following a visit from the FBI in February, 1950. This was four months prior to his arrest in June, 1950, which resulted in the involvement of the Rosenbergs.

These are contentions so daring they are never been advenced.

These are contentions so daring they have never been advanced in the defenses of any of the "atom spies."

Yet The Atom Spy Hoax offers far more documentary and conclusive evidence of this set of contentions than has ever been advanced against any of

In mid-1946, following Winston Churchill's address at Fulton, Mo., launching the Cold War, the GUAR-DIAN's Tabitha Petran, then a reporter on the N.Y. Post, wrote a free-lance booklet Open Secret. It documented the steps then already taken to be paged. steps then already taken to change public opinion from admiration to fear of the Soviet Union; and to construct in the public mind a concept of impending danger, rather than constructive development of atomic energy. Two significant, references included by Miss significant references included by Miss Petran appear in Reuben's book laugh to all but the most gullible."

In the nine years intervening between Miss Petran's carefully documented expose and the publication of The Atom Spy Hoax (publication date March 5, 1955, ninth anniversary of Churchill's Fulton, Mo., speech), the public of the western world has never ceased to be under the pressure of this "psychological" war.

THE CANADIAN SCARE: And the Canadian "spy" scare, so correctly characterized by O'Neill, became the the rest has been rationalized, as Reuben's painstaking work so tellingly demonstrates. That this could have succeeded, despite its having been a total sham, and despite the testimony of every atomic scientist that there of every atomic scientist that there were no atomic secrets to be spied out, is of course a crushing indictment of the western "free press," The Canadian cases—involving ulti-mately 26 people rounded up allegedly on the say-so of Igor Gouzenko, de-camped Soviet embassy clerk—were first made public in the form of accusations by a Canadian Royal Commission in late February, 1946. It was later shown that they had been discussed by Canada's Prime Minister McKenzie King with President Truman and British Prime Minister Attlee as early as September, 1945.

THE FINAL SCORE: British-American-Canadian policy of atomic poly" was announced by the White House in Nov., 1945. Shortly after Churchill's planned visit to the U.S. was announced. The Canadian A-spy yarn was then made public as the backdrop for Churchill's Fulton speech. U.S. newspapers quickly picked up the backdrop for Churchill's Fulton speech. U.S. newspapers quickly picked up the cue; a similar spy-ring was feared operating in the U.S. On the outcome of the Canadian cases, the U.S. press let its voice fall to a succession of buried paragraphs, so that even today few in the U.S. can recall any final and definite information on these "cornerstone" cases of the spy hunt.

The final score—as Reuben rounds it up in three engrossing chapters at it up in three engrossing chapters at the start of his book—was 16 freed, one being fined $500 for making a false statement in connection with a pass-port application for a Spanish War vet; nine imprisoned in Canada, none for anything at all to do with atomic espionage and all actually by self-entrapment into statements bringing them within the technical purview of the Officials Secrets Act, such as discussing political topics or formulae known to the world for 50 years.

The Nunn May Case

The tenth imprisoned was Allan Nunn May, arrested in Britain on March 4, the day before Churchill's Fulton address. May was eventually jailed for six years on his "confession" of having violated the Official Secrets Act Actually May was power martined. Act. Actually May was never mentioned in the original Canadian cases, but was included in its general context after his guilty plea in England. The device was having his photo identified by one of the accused in Canada, who knew only his lest now as a selection. one of the accused in Canada, who knew only his last name as a colleague in a scientific workers' association. Yet even despite his confession May never worked on the atom bomb and, according to Gen. Leslie Groves, chief of the U.S. wartime atomic project, could only have had a "general knowledge" of it—and that not obtained "through legitimate channels."

SELF-ENTRAPMENT: Thus, even with the inclusion of Allan Nunn May 3,000 miles away, the Canadian spy scare was a complete fake. And significantly, as Reuben's book points out for reference to future trials discussed in later chapters, the convictions obtained on any grounds at all resulted not from the original accusations, but from selfthe original accusations, but from self-entrapment by those who "talked" to the authorities thinking they were helping themselves or their country. Those who protested innocence and stuck to this were quickly exculpated. But the U.S. public never knew of the fakery of the Canadian arrests; hence it was easy for the Rankin Committee, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and eventually the Dept. of merce and eventually the Dept. of Justice and the FBI to drum up the peril of atomic espionage here.

The great explosion

Thus when in Sept. 1949 the news Thus when in Sept. 1949 the news came that an atomic explosion had occurred in the Soviet Union (directly on schedule with most scientists' predictions of 1945) the stage was set for the orgy of spy-hunting. It ended with the killing of the Rosenbergs but included, on the way, the almost "complete obliteration" of America's democratic heritage. Within 12 months "... the Communist Eleven, Alger Hiss, Judith Coplon and Valentin Gubitchev were convicted; Sen. Mc-Carthy emerged a national figure; the Korean War began; Ethel and Julius Rosenberg and Morton Sobell and five others were arrested as 'atom spies'; and, with the passage of the McCarran Act, anyone in America could be put behind the barbed wire of a detention camp for being, in the eyes of the FBI, a 'probable' espionage conspirator."

THE FUCHS ARREST: The heyday of

THE FUCHS ARREST: The heyday of Elizabeth Bentley, Louis Budenz and Whittaker Chambers arrived; the age of the informer was in full flower. And, on Jan. 31, 1950, President Truman announced our nation's intention to mannagature the hydrogen hamb. Two days nounced our nation's intention to manufacture the hydrogen bomb. Two days later the arrest was announced in London of Klaus Fuchs.

The details of Klaus Fuchs' confession have, of course, never been made public; but Reuben's research blasts sky-high at least one conclusion the public has been induced to draw from it—that Fuchs gave the FBI the name of Gold as a U.S. confederate.

Similarly, Reuben dissects the subsequent construction of a spy relation-ship between Gold and Greenglass. The discrepancies are manifold, but just one of them is sufficient again to blast one of them is sufficient again to blast the story sky-high:

The railway time-tables, carefully checked and verified for the period in which Gold was said to have visited the Greenglasses in Albuquerque, disclose Gold as a liar in his testimony as to when he left Albuquerque and when he arrived in New York (not by a mere matter of hours but by a full day). Thus, by his own story as presented by the government in the Rosenberg case, he could not possibly have obtained information from Greenglass on a Sunday afternoon and turned it on a Sunday afternoon and turned it over to a Soviet agent on a Tuesday evening in New York.

WHOLESALE HOAX: On top of this, the conflicting testimony of Gold and both Ruth and David Greenglass as to the purported passing of information, payment for it, etc., indicates that this too was a fabrication and a fairly sliptoo was a fabrication and a fairly sip-shod one. It could not have stood up had the impoverished Rosenberg de-fense had the means of checking it—or indeed if the Rosenberg defense had had an inkling of the possibility of wholesale hoax by the government.

The Sobell Case

Many, many more aspects of this engrossing, disturbing book deserve much fuller treatment than can be given here. One is the 42-page final chapter on the Sobell Case. If the victimization of Morton Sobell has ever been a matter of doubt to anyone, Reuben's final chapter must remove that doubt from any reasonable mind.

ALFRED DEAN SLACK: There is of

ALFRED DEAN SLACK: There is, of ALFRED DEAN SLACK: There is, of course, a nationwide movement to win a new trial for Sobell, and Reuben's findings are of inestimable value to that campaign. But there is no campaign in behalf of another victim of the Atom Spy hoax: a Syracuse, N.Y. chemist named Alfred Dean Slack, now serving 15 years in federal prison under circumstances of unbelievable injustice, appalling neglect by counsel (in this appalling neglect by counsel (in this case the noted Ray Jenkins of Mc-Carthy hearing fame) and deprivation of constitutional and ordinary human rights at every turn.

Reuben's book brings the facts in the Slack case to light for the first time anywhere. If there is the will anywhere to launch a campaign for justice for Slack, the ammunition for it is here.

Parts of The Atom Spy Hoax (as on Parts of The Atom Spy Hoax (as on the Slack and Hiss cases) read like a well-constructed whodunit. Other parts will, and should, take most attentive reading. The thesis of the work challenges the basic premise of the Cold War, and comes to grips with the real question: not why but whether the "atom spies" spied for the U.S.S.R. The extent to which Reuben is correct indicates the extent of the job American progressives have before them. can progressives have before them.

"...like walking a tightrope.... The French [are] extremely sensitive.... Mr. Dulles had to make it appear that he was not driving out the French." Behind the reluctance to hand over to the U.S. the Cambodian army's training, Robert Alden (NYT, 3/2) noted the "French fear of U.S. economic encroachments on Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia," After conferring with and Cambodia." After conferring with U.S. Special Envoy Gen. Collins in S. Vietnam and with Washington's S. E. Asian representatives gathered in Manila, Dulles flew to Formosa to meet Chiang and U.S.-Formosa military chiefs "in a 'lay it on the line session'—one of the biggest war councils ever held" by the U.S. and Chiang (N.Y. World-Telegram, 3/1).

While Dulles sought to extend U.S. military and economic control over S. E. Asia in the name of "free world defense," in New Orleans 400 U.S. businessmen told an equal number of Latin American businessmen the "specific, American businessmen the "specific, hard-core terms" for U.S. foreign investment (NYHT, 3/1): "The Latin Americans ... must be prepared to give guarantees of security and stability" against the popular ferment in their countries. Warned host Eric Johnston:

tical and economic stability."

W. GERMANY SPLINTERED: W. Germany came through with its required paper guarantees when parliament's lower house passed the rearmament pact, after a debate punctuated by "hoots, howls, sharp attacks and scornful rejoinders" (NYT, 2/26). Within Chancellor Adenauer's coalition there was bitter conflict, with the Free Democrats and All-German Bloc accusing him of "fraudulent" assurances that Germany would regain the disputed Saar territory (retaining international status under the pact). The Social Democrats, noting that some 40 supplementary bills have to be passed before W. Germany is really rearmed, pledged to continue their fight for talks with the U.S.S.R. on reuniting Germany. U.S.S.R. on reuniting Germany.

U.S.S.R. on reuniting Germany.

Mass protests against the pact, mounted in intensity for weeks and involving millions in almost every stratum of the country, reached a climax throughout W. Germany in the final days before the debate. In Munich
25,0000 marched behind banners proclaiming: "We don't want to die for dollars or rubles." Hundreds of police struggled in a snowstorm outside the Bonn parliament with anti-rearma-ment demonstrators shouting for Adenouer to "get out."

Adenauer's ace card to get the pact ratified—the assurance from "competent sources" that the U.S. and Britain would not continue to support France's claim to the Saar—only intensified Washington's dilemmas. The statement was expected to make it still harder for France's 21st government since the war, headed by Edgar Faure, to win approval of W. German rearmament.

AFRICA: THE GIANT STIRS - IV

The black Union of French Africa

AN ASSASSIN DIES IN ATTEMPT TO KILL THE SULTAN OF MOROCCO
Sultan Sidi Mohammed Moulay Ben Arafa rode to prayers at Rabat, a knife-wielding house painter On Sept. 11, 1953, as the Sul (1.) was killed by a guard as he sought to reach the newly-enthroned French favorite.

By W. E. B. DuBois

ERENCH AFRICA is a third larger than the continental United States and has 50 million inhabitants, It began with Algeria in 1830, which long counted as nothing. Then Bismarck handed over Tunis to placate the French after Sedan and in defiance of Italy's deep desire to have the site of ancient Carthage. Mussolini long made this his appeal for empires; he would shout at the end of a speech: "Et Tunisia?" The thousands would yell back: "A nos!"

The partition of Africa after the Berlin Congress of 1878 started France on her imperial path to age the Pritich.

started France on her imperial path to ape the British. Her explorers swept over North Africa, seizing everything between the Nile and the Atlantic, except the British West Coast and Spanish Africa in the northwest. Madagascar on the southeast was thrown in later.

50 YEARS OF REVOLT: At first France planned to seize the Nile valley, and with Menelik of Ethiopia nearly accomplished this. But she was blocked by Kitchener at Fashoda and, declining war, turned to consolidating her African empire. North of the Atlas mountains, in Algeria and Tunis, she built a little France with a small resident group of Frenchmen, with plenty of cheap labor from the hills and well-paying crops.

The dark natives, Mohammedan "berbers" with ancient Negroid strains, and the Italians rebelled, and for 50 years have seethed from sullen hate to open revolt. Today in Tunis comes a fierce demand for autonomy, opposed by resident Frenchmen born in Tunis and ruling ten times their number through their political and economic influence. They are set to retain control of the police and foreign affairs while Tunisia is determined to have autonomy in or outside France.

Algeria is cut in two. On the coast the French are Algeria is cut in two. On the coast the French are ecurely ensconced on the rich land, with fine houses and cheap servants and laborers. This in an integral part of France. Below the mountains are the mass of poor and sick peasants of the same stock as in Tunisia, beginning to writhe in poverty and revulsion. They furnish "bandits" for Tunisian unrest.

FANTASTIC HISTORY: Below the Atlas mountains lies the Sudan, Land of the Blacks, omitting the eastern part in the Nile Valley. These "islands of the West" lie between the desert, the sea and the valley of the Congo. These dark folk have been the site of civilizations and states rivaling Europe—the Ghana, the Mellestine, the Songhay, Haussa and Bornu Kanem; they fell beneath attack from the North, the slave trade to the west and religious wars from south the slave trade to the west, and religious wars from south and east, until in the 19th century European imperialism seized them and they went mainly to France. They have suffered fierce and cruel exploitation, war and neglect. The novel Batouala, which won the Goncourt prize, tells of the eploitation; and the late black governor, Eboue, made all effort to help.

Up in northwest Africa lies Morocco, land of the Moors, Up in northwest Africa lies Morocco, land of the Moors, a nation of mulattoes of Arabian descent (the tawny Moors and Black-a-Moors), from whom came the conquest of Spain and the splendid Moorish civilization. Here, after fantastic history involving expulsion from Spain and infiltration into the Sudan, came the revolt of the Riffs and the interference of France to take Morocco from Spain. She got it, and now wonders what she will or can do with it. The vast island of Madagascar on the southeast, with Netroid Malays, has rehelled and struggled and now parts. groid Malays, has rebelled and struggled and now pants HOLLOW "PARTNERSHIP": All this teritory France has tried to unite in a French union with France as senior partner. In French law the people of French West Africa and French Equatorial Africa are guaranteed "freedom of religion, press, speech and assembly." A recent labor code guarantees labor union freedom, the right to strike, collective bargaining, paid vacations and the 40-hour week.

But all this means little to illiterate and poverty.

But all this means little to illiterate and poverty-stricken millions. Less than a sixth of the children of school age are in school. In French West Africa a few get standard training and some training of high professional excellence.

There is political activity through chiefs in government pay and by popular assemblies. There are Sudanese deputies in the French parliament and a million registered voters in black French Africa among 21 million people. Thus in the "French Union" the blacks of French Africa have recognized status, but the Union has never really functioned.

THE VISE: The secret of French power here is her refusal to draw a color line. A Negro of ability can get recognition and preferment. He can, if he has the money, attend school in France. He can exploit his fellow Negroes as completely and cruelly as any white man if he has capital. Thus the black mass is drained of its natural leadership; the authority and ancient social customs of the tribe are replaced by Paris ideals and the black mass festers. Exceptions to this routine have appeared but social leadership is sorely needed.

routine have appeared but social leadership is sorely needed.

The French Union is a fine paper scheme but that inner government of France, its closely-knit group of rich industrial monopolists, holds it like a vise and keeps France the center of international cartels and the apex of world capitalism in close conjunction with America. This explains the rise and fall of Mendes-France.

Black French Africa fronts Europe and borders the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and the Belgian Congo. When it arises, as arise it will, it may form a black bloc which will dominate North Africa.

K: Yes, sure.
S: Is Cedric Belfrage a Communist?
E: To the best of my knowledge, no.
S: Do you know that Cedric Belfrage and George Oakden are one and the same person?

S: Did you know that Cedric Belfrage was deported in 1951?

K: Well, that is curious, because I saw him last week.

S: What?

K: I saw him last week—it may have been his ghost but it looked like him.

S: Where was this?

K: In the office of the NATIONAL (GUARDAN, where he works.

PAPER SHEEP AND WATERMELON LANTERNS

Spring Festival in Peking

By Israel Epstein

PEKING, CHINA EVERYONE IN PEKING is eating yuan hsiae, steaming-hot spherical balls of rice-paste stuffed with every variety of sweetmeat that an ingenious housewife can invent. They represent the big full moon and the end of the Spring Festival—China's traditional lunar New Year—which lasts for two weeks and for many generations has been the country's most popular holiday.

Factories and offices were out for four days, Factories and offices were out for four days, schools for the entire period. Big new state department stories, the giant Tung An bazaar, small private shops—all were thronged with customers. Through crowded streets, between scaffolded building sites, trucks and horse-carts carried great loads of foodstuffs and other goods to satisfy the buyers. Thousands of sidewalk vendors sold gay lanterns of every conceivable size and form—fish-shaped, erab-shaped, made to resemble a luscious, sliced watermelon. Huge red globular ones, with gilt tassels, waved in front of Government buildings.

FOR ONE DIME: Above all, this is a time for the children. Going out with our two-year old Sonya (Sung-yah), it took us an hour to navigate through the other small-fry—with their parents and grand-parents—in a tour of the square block on which our house opens. The pavements were lined with "New Year" stalls, with an unbelievable crush in front of each. One stall featured bamboo-framed paper sheep with heads nodding solemnly in the breeze-costing the equivalent of an American dime. Another sold paper theaters in which the actors—gay paper dolls—went through dances, courtships or battles when blown on or hung to catch the hot air current over a stove or radiator—also a dime. There were rattles, miniature drums, clay chickens that peck frantically when a string pendulum is swung, fuzzy monkeys of twisted wire and multi-colored fiber, artificial flowers of soft velvet—all two cents apiece. Sonya, after shouting and jumping her fill, suddenly began to drag heavy on my hand and I leaned over to find her blissfully asleep on her feet.

SPRING ALL OVER: Shops and peddlers processed their customers quickly, but there were queues at all hours, blocks long some of them, in front of theaters. We managed to get to a play called The Bright Sky, by the well-known dramatist Tsao Yu. It deals with a "pure scientist" in the formerly Rockefeller-subsidized Peking Union Medical College who took a long time to tumble to the fact that even bacteriology could be used for either healing or killing. It was appropriate to the occasion because it showed how the spring of a nation arouses spring in the heart of men spring in the heart of men.

We also had a day out of town, in a sleepy stone hamlet by a willow-lined canal, an old garrison post of the hereditary Manchu "bannermen" who once guarded the emperors. Now these tall, weather-beaten equivalents of London's beefeaters and their beaten equivalents of London's beeleaters and their families are cooperative farmers. They have their own democratic village council, school and spotless clinic. The traditional red festival scrolls on either side of their doorways are no longer inscribed to placate or please the gods. They proclaim such sentiment as "Taiwan is our territory, which we shall recover!" and "To resist aggression is the only way to guard peace."

At the Foreign Languages Academy nearby in

At the Foreign Languages Academy nearby, in handsome new buildings, we saw another play, in English—a dramatization of Albert Maltz's The Happiest Man in the World.

DIRECTION IS FORWARD: These are pictures of Peking as it celebrated its glad season, aware all along of the U.S. naval buildup in Taiwan strait, and of the brandishing of A- and H-bombs to send history into reverse gear. No one was blind but everyone was happy, because all that met the eye showed how life can move, and has moved, forward.

The lunar New Year, despite its ancient outward colorfulness, used to be a time when debts were mercilessly collected and poor men often committed suicide because they were unable to pay. Now the only money handed over is for the purchase of food, clothes and entertainment.

All through the festival, despite mild admonitions All through the festival despite mind admonitoring that the amount spent on them each year can build so many schools or so many ships, firecrackers boomed and sizzled, and fancy rockets filled each night's sky. The people here know their own strength. They know they can have their joy, build whatever is necessary, and defend both.

dealings with Matusow; look into his relationship with Roy Cohn; examine the record of all government payments made to Matusow; and question all Justice Dept. officials and FBI agents who had dealings with him.

COVERING UP FOR JOE: In continued hearings before the committee, Matusow stuck to his story that he is now telling the truth and is convinced that an investigation would show other government witnesses like Louis Budenz, Elizabeth Bentley, Paul Crouch and Manning Johnson gave false testi-mony "like mine." He offered to take a lie-detector test, challenged the others to do likewise.

He told the committee that in 1952 he "received money to take a witness out of the country." Reminded that he might be open to prosecution for obstructing justice, he replied that so could Sen. Joseph McCarthy and J. B. Matthews, a one-time staff director for McCarthy's committee. The disappearing witness was Arvilla P. Bentley, former wife of Rep. Alvin Bentley (R-Mich.) A special committee investigating McCarthy's finances in 1952 wanted to look into a report that Mrs. Bentley He told the committee that in 1952 to look into a report that Mrs. Bentley contributed $7,000 to him. Matusow last week said she told him the sum was $70,000. He accompanied her to the Bahamas so she couldn't be subpensed and said Matthews made the "arrangements" for the trip. Later he and the lady were married and divorced twice in the space of seven months.

"YOU MADE ME LIE": When Sen. Welker (R-Ida.) asked Matusow why he lied, he replied:

"You forced me to Committees like this and others. . . You are the one who was responsible for my role as a witness, not I."

In response to another line of ques-tioning, Matusow said he thinks the Communist Party is "not nearly as dangerous . . . as certain Congressional committees." Asked point-blank if he considered it a "real danger" to the nation's security, he answered:

"Frankly, no."

REPERCUSSIONS: Meanwhile REPERCUSSIONS: Meanwhile hearings continued in New York before Federal Judge Edward J. Dimock on a motion for a new trial for 13 Communist leaders convicted under the Smith Act, against whom Matusow has sworn he gave false testimony. Roy Cohn was expected to be called as a witness. Matusow next week is scheduled to appear in a Federal court in El Paso, Tex., in a move to secure a new trial for in a move to secure a new trial for Clinton Jencks convicted on a charge of falsely signing a Taft-Hartley non-

Communist affidavit. Matusow insists he gave false testimony at that trial. In Detroit six persons convicted un-der the Smith Act there appealed to House and Senate Judiciary Committees for an investigation of alleged perjury in their trial; citing a government witness who admitted on the stand that he lied. The appeal said:

"In view of the recent disclosures by Matusow and others, it appears that the practice of preparing government informers for the testimony in cases involving communism is so enmeshed with the manufacture of evidence that only an outside independent agency...can make a proper and thorough investigation."

Recently two other government wit-nesses have sworn that they were "coerced" and "conditioned" into giv-ing false testimony by attorneys for the Federal Communications Commission in a case charging Edward Lamb of Toledo, O., wealthy publisher and broadcaster, with past Communist

Spy on your friends

The Ralston-Purina people seem determined to make spies out of our moppets. On their packages of the cereal Rice-Cheks they are offering, for a quarter and a box top, a space-ranger periscope recommended for looking around corners to "spy on your friends" and an Outer Space Helmet from which you can see out, but no one can see you. This you can use to "spy on earth people." The solar-yellow helmet with its mirrored mask does make it a mite conspicuous for efficient spying purposes.

NEW YORK. N. Y.
On behalf of the families of Smith Act victims, let me express to all your readers our sincere thanks for their contributions in response to our Christmas appeal. I must confess that we in the Committee had some misgivings about our appeal this year, for we knew that everyone had been approached for many needy causes. But such is the understanding of the GUARDIAN readers that they knew as well as we that our need this year would be greater than ever, rather than less, with 13 families added. The total of contributions to date has been $7.082—almost a thousand dollars more than we received last year. A truly gratifying response, and contributions are still coming in!

Almost a century before that, when America's militant working women spoke of "equal rights" they meant economic equality, not yet achieved in to solve the remaining problems by the same methods. In 1924 they posed the "Equal Rights Amendment," which is still introduced in Congress yearly. It would guarantee women "equality" would guarantee women "equality" under Federal or state law, but would under Federal or state law, but would wipe out a century's gains in special protections. Terming it "dangerous," Mary Anderson, for 25 years director of the U. S. Labor Dept. Women's Bureau, has called its chief advocate the National Woman's Party "a front by the employers' associations that wanted to kill legislation for women." Intl. Airline Stewardesses & Stewards Assn., and the Louisiana and Maryland State Federations of Labor. No woman is on either the CIO or AFL exec. council; women did not figure in merger talks. Last month a Negro woman, Mrs. Marian Simmons, became head of United Packinghouse Workers' 10,000-member midwest district. Annual conferences on women workers by Packferences on women workers by Pack-inghouse & United Electrical Workers (Ind.) are a step forward, 1955. The move for political rights came later, at the first women's rights convention anywhere, held at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848 after thousands of women factory workers were involved in strikes in New England and Sarah Bagley led the fight for the 10-hour day in Massa-chusetts. In 1867 Susan B. Anthony's Women's Protective Assn. was recog-nized as part of the Natl. Labor Union, whose 1868 convention named a woman as asst. secy. and national organizer and advised women to persuade or force employers to "do justice to women by paying them equal wages for equal work."

BATTLE FOR RIGHTS: Adopting working women's tactics, hundreds of thousands of suffragettes picketed and petitioned to get the vote, by the constitutional amendment ratified in 1920. Few working men realize how the wo-men's struggles brought benefits to all workers. The strike of 27,000 Lawrence textile workers, mostly women, in 1912 undoubtedly influenced passage of the indoubtedly influenced passage of the first state minimum-wage law in Massachusetts that year.

In many countries the UN Commission on the Status of Women is still working on rights for women which the law has recognized here; the right to higher education to held office and the law has recognized here; the right to higher education, to hold office and serve on juries (still barred by five states), married women's rights to their own property and a job without a husband's consent, custody of children in divorce. In 16 countries women lack all political rights; 24 have granted them since the UN began in 1945. Last year saw ratification of the UN Convention on the Political Rights of Convention on the Political Rights of UNREALITY: But in the U. S., men's political rights did not end their economic position as "second-class citias Susan Anthony thought they would. Elated with their success on the vote, a segment of suffragettes sought In 1955 the rights women have won are often not realities. Although 29 million women (and 27 million men) voted in 1952, appointment of a woman to high office is still rare enough for headlines. Women can claim two ambassadors, one cabinet member, 17 Congressional seats, five out of 307 Federal judgeships. In their book Ladies of Courage, Eleanor Roosevelt and Lorena Hickok question whether all these appointments—for instance Health, Welfare & Education secy. Mrs. Hobby (not essentially a "woman's woman") and Ambassador to Italy Mrs. Luce (a "lone wolf")—represent an advancement for women as a whole.

COOLER TO UNIONS: Despite a de-

COOLER TO UNIONS: Despite a deliberate post-war drive by employers to keep them out of industry, the per-centage of women in the U. S. labor force has grown from 22% in 1940 to 33% today (it reached 34.7% in World War II). The Women's Bureau lists 1912 million workers in 1954, and 25 million (43% of all women of working age) who held jobs at some time during that year. It found a "striking increase" of women workers in heavy industry: half a million more since 1950, with substantial gains in the machinery, transportation equipment and fabricated metals industries. Women were 14 of all facindustries. Women were 14 of all factory employes in 1954, and 4/5 of these women were production workers. Many of these gains may be credited to local unions' fights for jobs for women.

Yet in 1953 the number of women in Yet in 1953 the number of women in unions—3 million, or one in every seven women workers—was the same as in 1944, showing a percentage drop from 21.8 to 16.6% of total union membership. Among 213 unions polled by the Women's Bureau, there were 11 research directors, 10 secretaries or secytreasurers, and several educational directors who were women—a decline rectors who were women—a decline since 1946. Women are presidents of the AFL Actors & Artists Guild, the that in 1952 there was one woman in every: 15 doctors, 27 lawyers (50% increase in 10 years), 83 engineers (ninefold increase). Women enter medical schools with great difficulty, on what amounts to a quota of a few percent. Always underpaid, women workers are getting poorer. Their median income, says the Women's Bureau, "has risen only slightly in the post-war period," as these medians show:

1945 $1,811 901 1952

In 1945 women got half of what men made; by 1952, it was just over a third (37%). The Women's Bureau budget for a single working man with no man with no in Arizona in dependents was $1. In Arizona in Feb., 1953, but only a third of women workers earned over $2,000. Women are kept out of higher-paying jobs by discrimination, as well as being paid less for the same job. In a Colorado com-munity the Bureau found men's wages in manufacturing $1.45 an hour; we-men doing similar work got 97½c.

For 2½ million Negro women workers, pay is even worse, as shown by these 1952 average earnings:

White men Negro men White women Negro women 517

Negro women made less than 13 of white women's earnings, and 1/6 of white men's. Double discrimination keeps them in the lowest-paid industries. In Memphis and Birmingham 75% of women laundry workers, mostly Ne-gro, were paid less than 55c an hour.

HOKUM & PROFITS: When the mass HOKUM & PROFITS: When the mass media picture woman as a "beautiful animal" (a recent movie ad) or a "homebody," or psychologists like Dr. Marynia Farnham list her "deepest needs" as "a wish for dependence, inwardness, a wish to be protected and made secure, a strong desire for passivity and compliance," it boils down to one thing—profits. UE found more than $5 billion difference between men's and women's wages; Union Research estimates that if all women were paid the same as men for equal work, paid the same as men for equal work, employers would pay out $10 billion more in wages each year.

"Equal pay for equal work" laws help; with many loopholes, they are now in effect in 13 states. Such laws, which would operate similarly to the present minimum-wage law, have been introduced into Congress since 1945. They are favored in both Republican and Democratic party platforms, and in AFL and CIO convention resolutions, but are not energetically pushed.

in AFL and CIO convention resolutions, but are not energetically pushed.
Unions can fight for women workers with shop programs like UE's: single rate scale and seniority list for both men and women; training and upgrading women to higher-paid jobs; an end to discriminatory hiring; advancing women in union leadership; organizing the 15 million unorganized women workers; day-care centers; maternity workers; day-care centers; maternity benefits. (The U.S. is the only advanced country without some form of maternity insurance; only in Rhode Island do expectant mothers collect "disability" insurance.) Unions can help educate their male members that as long as they permit lower rates on one out of three jobs, their own pay rates are undermined.

POWER FOR PEACE: Almost every women living either is or has been a worker. Vassar's president declares: "Women who do not work must have a greater interest in women who do." Many women's groups have stated, like the League of Women Voters:

"The principle of equal pay must be safeguarded if women are to have equal opportunity for development." Putting it into action, the 10 million members of the United Church Women, an affiliate of the Natl. Council of Churches: 800,000 in the Natl. Council of Negro Women: 8 million in the Natl. of Negro Women; 8 million in the Natl. Council of Catholic Women; 122,000 in the League of Women Voters, and tens of thousands in many Jewish women's groups and various professional organizations—these could be a powerful force. Above all they need and seek world peace. By raising their voices for their own first-class citizenship, they can compel their profound desire for it to be heeded.

'The Case of the Stubborn Editor'

For fighting Nazism in its lair, an American editor faces deportation. State investigators seek to stifle groups aiding persecuted people

By Eugene Gordon

By Eugene Gordon

THE N. Y. STATE Legislature in March, 1953, set up the Joint Legislative Committee on Charitable and Philanthropic Agencies and Organizations under the chairmanship of State Sen. Bernard P. Tompkins, Queens Republican, with Sen. Charles T. Corey, Queens, as counsel. Its public-hearing inquiries into alleged rackets resulted in laws controlling some types of solicitations for funds. In March, 1954, the committee's life was extended to December, 1954. Gov. Dewey, meantime, requested it to investigate children's camps with "red" leanings. A resolution last Jan. 11 continued the committee to March 31, 1955. It is now seeking tee to March 31, 1955. It is now seeking for a new lease on life.

Last month the committee's circuslike descent on New York City seemed intended to prove it deserved that lease. It summoned the Civil Rights Congress, the Joint Anti-Fascist Refusee Comthe Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Com-mittee and the Committee for Protec-tion of Foreign Born to hearings ac-companied by a fanfare of sensational news headlines about "millions" of dollars raised and misused by "red groups."

WHERE IT WENT OFF: On the theory that its miscalculation in going after the Disabled American Veterans, Inc., and other non-left organizations last year had cost chairman Tompkins his political head—he was defeated for the Senate last November by Democrat James J. Crisona—the committee apparently intended to concentrate on "left-wing" groups as long as it could.

This view was borne out from the beginning of the committee's three-day hearing at the N.Y. County Courthouse beginning Feb. 23. Nassau Sen. Edward P. Larkin (R) had succeeded Tompkins in the chair and Tompkins had taken over Corey's job as counsel. The com-mittee called author Dashiell Hammett, mittee called author Dashiell Hammett, one-time CRC executive board member George Marshall and former Trentonsix attorney O. John Rogge. Larkin and Tompkins kept their eyes for the most part on the press table. Tompkins twice, in the GUARDIAN reporter's hearing, asked World Telegram and Times reporters whether they had suggestions for questions to put to witnesses.

FRIENDLY JOHN: Larkin and Tompkins took turns at questioning Hammett and Marshall. The intent clearly mett and Marshall. The intent clearly was to prove Hammett a "figurehead" controlled by "the Communists." and to make Marshall admit that the CRC had no executive board but was dominated by "the Communists." "Friendly" witness Rogge declared he had come "rejuctantly" to the conclusion that some form of remedial legislation, applicable to fund raisers is lation applicable to fund raisers is desirable. Larkin coached Rogge to say "uncontrolled public clamor" was not the "proper function" of any organiza-Rogge said that in his opinion de" organizations didn't help de-"outside" organizations difendants get a fair trial.

New Jersey NAACP representative Clifford R. Moore agreed. Moore, a Negro, ran ahead of the committee's questions, ran ahead of the committee's questions, often answering before asked that yes, CRC was "Communist"; no, CRC was not needed in the Trenton Six case; no, none of the "hundreds of thousands" raised by CRC was used for the Trenton Six; yes, the State of New Jersey would have given them a fair trial. Moore was refuted by James Imbrie of Lawrenceville, N. J., retired banker and one-time secretary of the banker and one-time secretary of the Princeton Committee to Help the Trenton Six. He said that if the "outside" CRC hadn't come into the case the men might have been executed.

LARKIN'S JOKE: The committee's LARKIN'S JOKE: The committee's main fire was centered on CRC exec. secy. William L. Patterson. With one eye on the press, Larkin answered, when Patterson requested that his attorney be allowed to sit beside him, "I don't know of any case where the committee is supposed to supply a love seat." Nobody—including members of committee is supposed to supply a love seat." Nobody—including members of the press—laughed, so Larkin himself laughed. He later repeated the crack. The committee's intention, however, was clearly to make ridicule of Patterson a part of its general arsenal against "this obstructionist" witness. against this obstructionist withess. It badgered him with the question—in various guises—of CRC books and records containing names and addresses of contributors.

ROBESON ON STAND: Abner Green refused to answer any questions about the Committee for Protection of For-eign Born. Neither would Mrs. Pauline Reyce and Dr. Mark Straus give in-formation on the Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee.

Paul Robeson, asked how much money he raised for CRC, replied that Interlandi in Des Moines Register Sure, higher salaries will attract better men in government, but then, what's going to happen to us?"

as an artist he gave his talent to many organizations "struggling for the rights of my people." He said he didn't know how much money was raised but he hoped it was "a lot." He had "the fullest confidence in the people who are running CRC and so I don't ask them how they're spending the money I help raise" I help raise."

Just before closing its hearings the committee publicized a letter from Atty. Gen. Javits promising cooperation in drawing up any legislation aimed at these organizations. Larkin promised that such legislation, would promised that such legislation would be enacted. Manhattan Dist. Atty.
Frank S. Hogan two days later called for records of the hearings to scrutinize them for possible violations of existing state laws.

HOW THE CRC AND FOREIGN BORN GROUP OPERATE

Their business is not charity but conscience

By Elmer Bendiner

THE N. Y. STATE Legislative Committee on Charitable and Philanthropic Agencies, set up to probe big-money swindles in the field, has singled out three targets which are neither charities nor philanthropies.

They operate on so frayed a shoestring that professional philanthropists would scorn them. Their combined payrolls would scarcely equal the "incidental" expenses of a Madison Av. advertising agency publicizing a campaign against a particular disease.

The Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee is no longer in existence and the legislators could do no more than harass people once connected with it.

The Civil Rights Congress and the American Committee for Protection of American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born are very much in business; they got the committee's chief attention.

exec. secy. William Patterson works out of a crowded office up one flight of rickety stairs in an ancient brownstone at 6 E. 17th St. He told the GUARDIAN that the CRC was not a charity organization: "Our business is to arouse the conscience of the world."

No ledger book can show the number of consciences of the world."

No ledger book can show the number of consciences roused per dollar spent. The CRC is not primarily a legal aid society (though many times it does provide legal aid). It is a society for mass defense.

Patterson traced two cases. He said that Willie McGee went to his death in Mississippi on a trumped-up rape charge not because of any weakness in his legal defense but because not enough people had been stirred.

By contrast the Trenton Six were saved from death not so much by work within the courtroom as protest outside. If left solely to the lawyers, the judge and the jury, the six might well judge and the jury, the six might well be dead, he said. The GUARDIAN stirred sentiment at home and overseas: the overseas press forced the case to the attention of the press at home.

The CRC rallied people into action.
There are other organizations to defend people in court Patterson said to defend before the people, often more potent than lawyers.

2 STANDING CASES: Committee probers tried to balance cases against expenditures, Patterson said, but in fact there are two cases always on the CRC docket: racism and political sup-pression. There is no one "case" with which to link the publication of We Charge Genocide, for example, or Pat-terson's appearances before the UN. When Pennsylvania prosecuted Communist Party leader Steve Nelson under a local anti-sedition statute, the CRC foresaw similar moves in other states and moved to combat them. Such states and moved to combat them. Such wide-ranging campaigns take far more CRC money than courtroom defenses. Here is the way the CRC dollars is divided: for mass campaigns, 58c; legal fees, 30c; administration, 12c. That last figure pays a staff of eight people with a total payroll of $500 a week. (Patterson draws $60 a week and frequently misses his paydays.) Rent is $100 a month; the phone bill about

THE FOREIGN BORN: Headquarters of the other main target of the legislative probe—the American Comm. for Protection of Foreign Born—is in a basement at 23 W. 26th St. At the moment the Committee is defending 60 American citizens against denaturalization proceedings, 340 non-citizens against deportation. Almost all are political cases, but there are more than 1.006 non-political cases in more than 1,000 non-political cases in the committee mill. (In its 22 years most of the committee's work has been non-political.) These include peo-ple who want to become citizens, who need help and advice in bringing their families to the U.S. or in registering under the Walter-McCarran Act.

Above all there is the continuing "case" which distinguishes the Committee from a social service organization: the battle to help the individual by removing the threat that hangs over the whole community of foreign born. The Committee campaigns day born. The Committee campaigns day in and day out for repeal of the Walter-McCarran Law. It sends out a flood of material seeking, like the CRC, to rouse the conscience of the nation on the rights of the foreign born and their relation to the rights of all Americans.

18,000 A YEAR HELPED: From its origin in 1933 the Committee has raised about $500,000. The number of persons helped by the Committee up to 1952 averaged 18,000 a year. The Committee won praise not only from those it aided but from the government and from community leaders. ment and from community leaders.

Since passage of the Walter-McCarran Act the Committee's work has shifted. It is now not so easy to help people to citizenship; if the applicant tells the Immigration Service that the Committee assisted him with the forms it would be "grounds" to deny him his papers. The Committee now has the new job of protecting itself. Two years ago the Subversive Activities Control Board put the Committee on its

FACTS AND FIGURES: Committee FACTS AND FIGURES: Committee exec. secy. Abner Green told the GUARDIAN he believes the state legislative probe was dictated in part by the government's frantic quest for evidence against the Committee before the SACB. In at least one confirmed instance Immigration Service representatives tried to persuade a man up. sentatives tried to persuade a man up for deportation to testify against the Committee by promising him his citizenship. He offered to testify for the agenda. No hearing has yet been held.

Green gets $65 a week. The total payro! last year was $8,490. Six people worked for two months of the year, two for eight months. The Committee raised $23,254.59 and spent $22,023.39. The rousing of consciences by literature (printing and mailing) and conferences cost $7,901; defense of deportees, $1,097 and self-defense of the Committee, $3,036.

Committee instead.

In giving the American people far more than its money's worth the Committee thinks of itself in the terms that President Roosevelt thought of it. In 1940 he wrote to the Committee:

"It [the Committee] has undertaken the task of assuring fair play to the foreign born in the U.S. Every American wishes it success. . . . If reason is to prevail against intolerance, we must always be on guard.

Balance sheet

This is the balance sheet of the Civil ights Congress on the Trenton Case: Contributions earmarked for the Trenton Six campaign: 1949, $15,650.67. 1950. $2 044.86; 1951, $639. Total: $18,334.53.

CRC expenditures on the campaign 1949, $15,145.10; 1950, $2,887.57; 195 $1,650.18. Total: $19,682.85.

Expenditures were itemized: legal fees, payroll, $3,458; printing, postage, mailing, $8,963,72.

ing, $8,963.72.

Legislative probers claimed far greater amounts were collected and charged that sums turned over by the N.Y. chapter weer not recorded by the national office. CRC spokesmen said that funds turned over by chapters were listed by the national office as contributions. The committee was thus counting the same money twice, first as money collected by the N Y. chapter and again as recorded in the national office records as a contribution. This would account also for the fact that such transfers of funds were not so recorded though all money was accounted for.

3d youth held insane, goes to Dannemora

THE LAST WORD was writ-ten in the tragedy of the three Puerto Rican youths when, on Feb. 22, Gov. Harriman ordered that Pedro Antonio Rios, 22, be taken from Sing Sing's death house to the Dannemora State Hospital for Dannemora State Hospital for Insane Convicts.

If at any time he should be found sane he would still face the electric chair. The only hope seemed to lie in seeking a new trial on the grounds that Rios is insane now and he might have been insane at the time of his trial. insane at the time of his trial in March, 1954, rendering it invalid. Whether or not funds could be found for such legal steps was not known.

The three were convicted of murder in a trial atmosphere charged with hysteria.

N. Y. anti-discrimination law: 10 years old — and toothless

By Arthur Schutzer Guardian legislative correspondent

AFTER nearly ten years, New York State's Law Against Dis-

AFTER nearly ten years, New York State's Law Against Discrimination remains toothless. The 1954 annual report just issued by the State Commission Against Discrimination shows:

• From July 1, 1945, when the law took effect, to Dec. 31, 1954, only 2.946 complaints were filed. The major reason for this unbelievably small number is that only the individual directly aggrieved may file a complaint—which bars the NAACP, American Jewish Congress, unions, veterans and other groups from filing them in behalf of the members. Clearly, many individuals fear to file complaints because—though the law prohibits it—employers may penalize them. Bills to permit any interested person or organization to file complaints are killed annually.

• Of 2,779 complaints of job discrimination, 668 were "adjusted after conference and conciliation"; 1,298 were dismissed because the Commission found "no probable cause," 184 because it "lacked jurisdiction"; 62 were "withdrawn"; in 561 cases, the Commission found "no probable cause as to the specific complaint but other discriminatory practices or policies were found and eliminated."

and eliminated.

Of the 2,779 complaints disposed of over a ten-year period, only six resulted in a formal hearing—and two of these "were adjusted by conciliation prior to the date set for hearing."

DISCREET & GENTLE: In 1952, the law was amended to cover discrimination in places of public accommodation, resort and amusement (hotels, restaurants, beauty and barber shops, retail stores, travel agencies). In nearly three years, only 82 complaints were filed under this amendment. Of these, 31 were "adjusted after conference and conciliation"; 28 were dismissed because of "no probable cause," five for "lack of jurisdiction"; and in three cases, "the specific complaint was dismissed but other discriminatory policies or practices were found and eliminated." criminatory policies or practices were found and eliminated."
Only two resulted in a formal hearing—and since these involved the same public place, a single hearing took place, the only one

Only two resulted in a formal hearing—and since these involved the same public place, a single hearing took place, the only one held in almost three years since the amendment took effect.

The law itself—and the Commission—stress investigation and conciliation while shying away from strict enforcement. The guiding idea seems to be that big business will somehow cease its continuing and widespread discriminatory practices if the complaints are handled discreetly, gently and without publicity. A glimpse into SCAD's problems was offered by a survey of conditions in Chicago, Los Angeles and New York by the Jewish Labor Committee, showing that "anti-Semitism in employment was more widespread than it had realized" (N.Y. Times, 2/28). The committee's report urged "strengthening and extension of the powers" of SCAD, authorizing it to investigate concerns "without waiting for individual complaints as now required by law."

How the runaway bosses hold a club over unions in northeastern cities

MAYOR H. C. RHODES of Pelahatchie, Miss., recently wrote to northern manufacturers inviting them south. Promising that Pelahatchie would exempt them from taxes for 99 years and build their plant, he clinched his sales talk by offering Pelahatchie workmen at bargain rates;

"Then our wonderful labor, 98% native born, mostly high school graduates, will lower average hourly industrial wage rates 6c to 49c below other Southern states, and from 50c to 95c below Northern states. You will also get a much higher average man produchigher average man produc-tion, some plants even get-ting double what they got in their Northern plants. This labor is truly American, not inflicted [sic] with the 'Some-thing for Nothing' idea and works together joyously with Management for the success of both" of both."

"DON'T WANT UNIONS": A spokesman for the S. Carolina Development Board told a reporter for the Wall St. Journal:

"We don't encourage any company to come into the state if it's going to bring a union with it. Our people don't want unions. They're individualistic and don't want out-siders telling them what to

The South draws the line at only one kind of "outsider." Its wooing has given Northern manufacturers a handle with which to beat down standards. The ultimatum that a plant will leave town unless—brings concessions from labor and concessions from labor and the community much as a gun does in a hold-up. The Otis Elevator Co., for example, has operated in Yonkers for 101 years but on Jan. 16 said it must cut costs or move. At the same time the company admitted it was operating profitably and was not "on the verge of becoming unprofitable."

THE OTIS PLAN: The company never made public its precise demands, but company pres. Leroy A. Petersen on Jan. 23 proposed to the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Workers a revision in the wage incentive plan and elimination of bonus provisions which could mean a wage-cut of $15-$25 a week for production workers.

When the referendum was held for the union member-ship on Feb. 21, the terms were still unclear; but production workers voted 767-346, office workers 237-37, to accept. After the vote the company and the union issued a joint statement that the agree-ment would mean "no reduction in rates of pay, salaries, pension or welfare benefits" and the wage incentive system would be continued. The terms are still not released but union leaders say they deal with seniority, bonuses and stand-ards. A concession on work standards held the threat of a speed-up.

Yonkers officials, troubled by the recent flight of the Alexander Smith Carpet Co. from their city, announced that "something can be done" about the Otis Co.'s tax bill of $3,008,150 for 1955. (Yonkers pleaded poverty when its school system was recently ex-posed as the shabblest in the state.) The company recently won a rebate of $91,000 on its 1947-51 tax bill and is seeking a rebate on its 1952-54 taxes. TARRYTOWN TENSION: similar but smaller-scale ulti-matum was issued Tarrytown when the Rhythm Hat Co. told its 120 employes it would close shop in April. Nathaniel Spector, manager of the Millinery Workers Joint Board, part of the AFL United Hat, Cap & Millinery Workers, charged a plot to shift Rhythm's business to the nonunion Conway Hats Co. Conway, N. C.

As tension grew in the plant, the company shut down and locked its workers out. Last week state mediators rushed to Tarrytown and persuaded both sides to agree on a new contract, providing a 5c hourly wage increase but reducing working hours from 40 to 35 and banning all strikes and lockouts. The contract runs for one year. Company pres. David Bader said the new contract would enable him to operate at a profit and he would stay. Tarrytown and persuaded both would stay.

APPLAUSE AND GROANS: The hatters meanwhile signed a three-year compact with the Eastern Women's Headwear Assn. which union officials called "a new high in labor-management co - operation." The "high" consisted of abandoning demands for an increased pension fund in favor of a $1,500,000 war chest with which to persuade more women to buy more hats.

Union officials stemmed the exodus and reminded the members that the union had 'moved historically with vision and had won the applause of labor, press and the general public for this.'"

The members were told that the employers were in need of a "Marshall Plan"; they voted approval "unanimously but without enthusiasm" for $1,500,000 for hat propaganda instead of pensions. Enthusi-asm came from the N:Y. Daily News, in an editorial headed: "We Doff Our Bonnets, Gents." Summing up the situations of Otis and the hat industry, it said: "Very intelligent and welcome worker-boss understanding in both these cases, we'd say." we'd say.

(Money refund-ed after inspection, if you are not convinced)

In seven months almost 800 GUARDIAN families have taken advantage of our Imported Stainless Steel offer. Yet, we believe there are hundreds more who need and would buy but are skeptical about how we can sell at half the price of comparable models.

The answer is that large companies spend millions in advertising and merchandising through wholesalers, jobbers, distributors and retailers and this amount is tacked on the price so there is a profit for all concerned. Our model is copied from a famous Scandinavian design and crafted in Japan, which has favorable tariff relations with the United States.

Nevertheless, we believe the tableware speaks for itself. If you see it, we are certain you will buy it and recommend it to others. Therefore, we make this offer:

For one dollar (less than our cost) we will send a four-piece place setting for examination. Keep it for ten days. Show it to your friends. Compare it with other models for price, design, construction. If you agree it is an outstanding value, fill out your setting from the offers below and remit the difference (i.e, for a $12.95 setting send $11.95; for a $16.95 setting send $15.95). send $15.95).

If you are not convinced, return the setting and your dol'ar will be refunded immediately.

* This offer is limited and may be withdrawn at any time. There is a limit of one place setting to a custome .

the SPECTATOR-

Assassins of the theater

"THE WRITING OF PLAYS," said Bernard Shaw, "is a great matter, forming as it does the minds and affections of men in such sort that whatsoever they see done in show on the stage, they will presently be doing in earnest in the world.

If that is true of the effect of Maxwell Anderson's The Bad Seed on the multitudes flocking to see it, it is a depressing thought. Anderson has succeeded in reducing the playwright's art to a mouthpiece for the anti-"eggheads" who, supported by incalculable wealth, possess powers of absolute destruction.

The Bad Seed is about a bewitching tot of our time who has murdered one person, and is about to murder two more.

Her mother, Christina, mar-ried to a Pentagon officer away on a mission, is a away on a mission, is a noted "criminologist's" daugh-ter but apparently hasn't read a line of child-guidance literature; despite the por-tents in her offspring, she has never sought the help of the husband she adores, the stepfather she reveres, or even a psychiatrist. Con-fronted with the evidence of her daughter's murder of a classmate Christine-through the intervention of a "woman who once knew Freud"—is persuaded that a dream persuaded that a dream which has plagued her since childhood points to some genetic sin of her own.

"You can be proud. You have the biggest inferiority complex in the world."

NEVER MIND, OPERATOR: She compels her stepfather to reveal that she is the daughter of a notorious but glamorous murderess. In her one normal action throughout this mishmash she rushes to the telephone to summon her husband—but then she rushes to the telephone to summon her husband—but then for no explained reason cancels the call. We are asked to assume that a mother finding her child is a murderess would "naturally" not wish to trouble her husband, who loves her, with this knowledge. Egged on by her "dream" and psychoanalytic jargon, Christine "protects" her child from the Law by feeding her an overdose of sleeping pills, then kills herself. But neighbors are roused by the suicide shot and the child is saved to continue her assassin's career.

"You are fortunate," says the lady who once knew Freud to the bereaved husband, "you have this angel child to comfort you." None of the students of crime and psychology in the play suspects that the child is not the angel she appears. So the curtain falls, to the applause of an audience bunkoed by performances that conceal Broadway's poverty of heart and mind,

ANTI-HUMANIST: That this is a political play seems to have

ANTI-HUMANIST: That this is a political play seems to have escaped its reviewers, but will be recognized by anyone who ever spoke a word for women's equality, liberation of the mind, or the elevation of family life to a community of people with the capacity for exchanging thought. The bad seed bears fruit: the idea that the only way out is to compound murder by more murder and suicide is thrust upon the audience by as calculating an army of anti-humanists as ever attacked any people. May we say that Mr. Anderson meant no such thing? What, then, did he mean? Shaw wrote: "No great writer uses his skill to conceal his meaning." Anderson's stage "criminologist" is explicit. "Genetic murderers" are to be regarded as sick, incurable: "They are blind, and you cannot teach the blind to see." Worse than nonsense, all of it; and there is no truth in any of it. Are we to tell mothers to slay their young if they are born blind, and to kill themselves because Grandmother was blind? was blind?

A LACK OF LEARNING: This propaganda rejects reason. It tosses off notions of pre-destination, original sin, self-negation as though they were sodapop, not hemlock. When a writer of Anderson's commercial bulk rejects learning, at the threshold of an era of limitless new human achievement—if men and women but will it—it is not merely an artistic concern. Anderson's assumptions of the individual's singularity and damnation will be welcomed by know-nothings with a stake in the purely destructive power of what Shaw called the American "volcanic political instinct."

To the capable cast, my hope is that soon unspoiled humane political instinct."

To the capable cast, my hope is that soon unspoiled, humane plays will reappear, to save their souls and ours. But the old formula, "Keep it 'common,' make it sound un-common, equals profit," still operates. Anderson has simply served up in a flattened version of Eliot's high-hat a dish of Spillane without the overt filth. I do not demand gigantic rewards every time I go to the theater. Merely the ghost of Ibsen's social passion, the shadow of Shaw's nobility, the echo of Shakespeare's music; a bit of sense, a dash of wit, an inflection of love. An end to bloody bores like The Bad Seed.

NANCOUVER, B.C.
Have been reading the latest GUARDIAN, Feb. 7, and think perhaps men like Belfrage are needed in the U.S.A. even more than in his native land at this moment.

But looking at the storm center from away off here on the peri-meter, we take heart from the be-lief, based on history, that a bad situation will again produce the men and women capable of dealing with it. Walter Wiggins
