White House joins pressure drive for tough anti-labor bill

F THE 86TH CONGRESS does nothing else, it seems hell-bent on passing legislation to "reform" labor. Teamed with anti-union stalwarts are liberals who seem convinced the public is persuaded that unions must be controlled. Together they make a steamroller that may hit labor harder than the Taft-Hartley law.

On August 11 the House is to begin debate on three proposals: (1) the Elliot bill, voted by the House Labor Committee, described as "moderate" and endorsed by House Speaker Rayburn; (2) the Landrum-Griffin bill, endorsed by Southern Democrats and Republicans, described as "strong;" (3) the Shelley bill, endorsed by liberals, described as "mild."

All three start from the premise that existing criminal laws are not enough to cover corruption in labor and that the Federal government must oversee union affairs. The labels describe to what degree unions will be hamstrung. In the extreme it could mean sharp curtailment of present union functions under supervision of the Secretary of Labor.

HIGH PRESSURE: In advance of the debate, Congress was subjected to what one Washington reporter said was "some of the greatest lobbying... we will ever see." The N.Y. Herald Tribune said: "The Chamber of Commerce is hurling its influence against the AFL-CIO, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers against James Hoffa's Teamsters Union." Some Congressmen reported they were receiving hundreds of letters a day demanding anti-labor legislation.

Senate rackets committee counsel Robert Kennedy appeared on two nationally televised shows to charge that Hoffa had made deals with employers, sold out his union's membership and "put gangsters and racketeers in important positions within the Teamsters union."

On Aug. 4 and 5 chairman John L. McClellan (D.-Ark.) released the Senate rackets committee's report charging cor-

Ike, K visits lift world peace hopes

THE STOCK MARKET SAGGED, but world hopes rose high at the big news of the month and the decade, that Premier Khrushchev and President Eisenhower are to exchange visits to explore the possibilities for a durable peace.

It was President Eisenhower's initiative which brought about the exchange of invitations, but it was a turn of events long sought by the Soviet premier. When reporters asked him, during an inspection of Vice President Nixon's plane in Moscow before the big news broke, whether he would like to go to America in this plane, Khrushchev replied readily: "This one or some other one."

There were immediate adverse reactions—the New York Daily News, David Lawrence in his Herald Tribune column and in his magazine U.S. News and World Report; Cardinal Cushing in Boston and faithful John W. McCormack from his balliwick; Sen. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire and the Minnesota Congressman known as Chiang Kai Judd (Khrushchev remarked in a press conference that "it's a small herd that has no black sheep")—but everywhere else informed opinion approved and hailed the remarkable turn of events, and a Gallup poll, conducted before the invitation was official, showed 50% of Americans wanting Khrushchev invited, as against 36% opposed and 14% undecided.

N THE POSITIVE SIDE, the New York Times announced the exchange of visits with three rows of "box car" type across the top of Page One on Aug. 4. Columnist Walter Lippmann called it "a diplomatic break-through" and the Washington Post noted with editorial satisfaction that "the thaw has certainly been turned on full blast." I. F. Stone in his Weekly called the exchange "good news for mankind."

How did it come about?

Washington columnist Joseph Alsop disclosed on Aug. 7 that President Eisenhower issued the invitation on the advice of Secy. of State Christian Herter prior to Herter's departure July 11 for the second round of foreign ministers' talks at Geneva. When the President approved the idea, Herter transmitted the invitation verbally to Soviet Vice Premier Frol Kozlov during a farewell talk at the conclusion of Kozlov's visit here, with Ambassador Mikhail Menshikov present. Both men were delighted, if astonished, Alsop reported. The invitation apparently reached Khrushchev during his tour in Poland, resulting in an immediate letter accepting the invitation and in turn in

ARE BIG LANDOWNERS BEHIND ANTI-CASTRO VIOLENCE?

What Cuba's revolutionary land reform law will do

By Kumar Goshal

N THE EVE of the Latin American foreign ministers' conference scheduled to open Aug. 12 in Santiago de Chile, violence against Premier Fidel Castro's government erupted in several sections

A hit and run attack was made on Castro's residence across Havana Bay on Aug. 9. At the same time men in an automobile fired on the American - owned Cuban Electric Co. and on guards at the San Ambrose army supply headquarters next door. The attackers escaped. Reports of an invasion from the Dominican Republic of the Isle of Pines south of Havana province was denied by Armed Forces-Chief Raul Castro, brother of Premier Fidel Castro. The government immediately began a roundup of suspects throughout the country.

The attacks were not unexpected. The revolutionary government has for some time believed that Batista supporters in the Dominican Republic were preparing an invasion force of 20,000. The recent attacks were apparently timed to prevent Castro from personally appearing at the conference in Chile and excoriating dictatorships like that of Rafael Trujillo of the Dominican Republic. They were also perhaps meant as a warning against putting into effect the May 17 Agrarian Law.

THE WAY IT WAS: Under the pre-revolutionary set-up, a few hundred families and a handful of foreign investors owned more than three-fourths of the farmland. Castro noted that (1) 85% of the small farmers paid rent and lived "under the constant threat of being dispossessed from the land they cultivated;" (2) 200,000 peasant families owned no land at all, and were squatters, tenants, sharecroppers or migratory laborers; (3) "more than half the best cultivated land belongs to foreigners [and] in Oriente, the largest province, the lands of the United Fruit Co. and West Indian Co. join the north coast to the southern one."

join the north coast to the southern one."

Here are some conditions of peasant life in pre-revolutionary days:

The average rural Cuban worked less than 100 days a year, from January through May when the sugar crop was harvested, earning from $90 to $150 during the period. He had to stretch this income through the rest of the year which come through the rest of the year which was "tiempo muerto" (the dead season).

Among Cuba's rural families, 60% lived in thatched roof huts with dirt floors and without running water or any sanitary facilities; 85% of these "homes" had only two rooms; 90% of those with artificial light used kerosene; 30% had no artificial light of any kind.

- No schools were available nearby to 44% of the rural population; 43% were illiterate.
- Only one out of ten ever tasted milk, and one out of 25 had meat regularly.

Sorry I didn't see our NATIONAL GUARDIAN reporter, Kumar Goshal.

I saw thousands of farmers I saw thousands of farmers with machetes come in on flat cars from all over Cuba. They looked like they were starving. They used stones for pillows and were thin and poorly dressed, young and old (you couldn't tell the difference). I talked to a soldier of the Castro movement in the crowd with me. He was in civilian clothes and with his civilian clothes and with his sweetheart, planning to get mar-ried when the country gets in better shape.

The spirit of the people and the Castro system will improve their condition slowly but surely, if we keep our hands off. I would like to advise our people that when they go on vacation, to see Cuba first. The people of Cuba cuba first. The people of cuba are very happy and generous to visitors. ### REPORT TO READERS

Ike, K visits

viting President Eisenhower to visit the U.S.S.R. this fall. (This development was probably the major reason for Khrushchev's cancellation of his scheduled Scandinavian visit.)

What prompted Herter to suggest the invitation to the President was undoubtedly the impasse at Geneva, and the hope of stalling off a crisis over Berlin. Herter and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko both knew of the impending visits during the last weeks at Geneva; a fact on which both relied in bringing the sessions to a close without agreements.

WHATEVER THE CIRCUMSTANCES, the developments demonstrate dramatically the changing atmosphere in world relations since the departure of John Foster Dulles from the scene. Opposed to Summit meetings and other deterrents to the Cold War, Dulles destroyed the good effects of the 1955 Summit meeting, scuttled the efforts of the President's emissary Harold Stassen for disarmament, and opposed not only a Khrushchev visit here, but Vice President Nixon's visit to the U.S.S.R.

Walter Lippmann views the events since Dulles' resignation as "a deliberate change of diplomatic strategy by the Eisenhower Administration:" and says that "what we have backed into is a round of popular diplomacy which draws its energy from the popular feeling everywhere that a nuclear war must be avoided."

Lippmann, however, warns against expectations that Khrushchev in his talks with the President "would or could detach the Soviet Union from its interest in and its support of the great revolutionary movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America."

If these reservations are kept in mind, the world may indeed benefit from the exchange of visits between the U.S. President who has always declared himself a man of peace, and the rival statesman whom he calls "Nikito Krook-chef."

NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV announced his acceptance and that of President Eisenhower of the exchange visit at a lively press conference, the third since he became premier 16 months ago.

He said, as expected, that the question of Germany would have top priority in his approaching talks with President Eisenhower. Bringing about a German peace treaty was, he said, "the question of questions, the problem of problems." He declared there would be no change in his country's proposal that there should be a treaty between two German states, and that West Berlin should be converted into a free city. But he does not intend to come here "with one rocket in one pocket and another rocket in the other."

Rather, he is prepared "to turn out my pockets to show that I am harmless. In the old times, people used to leave their weapons in the hall when they went in to talk peace. We should do that now, and there should be no experimentally." and there should be no saber-rattling."

To a correspondent's question as to whether he intended to show President Eisenhower a rocket site, he replied in the negative. Where rockets stand, the talk cannot be about peace, but about preparing for war, he said. He would decline to visit military installations in the U.S. if invited, he said.

This response created more of a stir here than anything else the Premier said, producing an immediate statement from Secy. of Defense Neil H. McElroy expressing hope that K. would be shown secret military bases in this country, to ease the danger of war through Soviet "miscalculations" of American strength.

THE KHRUSHCHEV VISIT poses acute problems for a nation THE KHRUSHCHEV VISIT poses acute problems for a nation which has consistently sought to poison the minds of its people against any and all leaders of the Soviet Union. The New York Daily News greeted the announcement of his visit with a cartoon depicting K. with a bloody dagger behind his back and a bloody hand thrust forth, and an editorial caption "CLASP HANDS WITH MURDER, MR. PRESIDENT?" Vice President Nixon, returning from his tour of the Soviet Union and Poland, where he met with unalloyed hospitality and even mass demonstrations as a harbinger of peace, made a special point of warning Hungarian refugees in this country against unpleasantness toward the Soviet Premier. against unpleasantness toward the Soviet Premier.

It is sad but true that nowhere in the U.S. at the present time are masses of people prepared, as they were at the conclusion of World War II, to greet an emissary of the Soviet Union with open arms. But it is noteworthy that 14 years of official drum-beating in the ears of America has not deafened the nation to the hope for

Mr. Khrushchev may not be greeted by mass demonstrations; but in hearts and homes all over the nation, his coming presages the beginning of the end of the Cold War.

Ten Years Ago in the Guardian

OUR YEARS AFTER winning history's bloodiest war, the U.S., which controls half the world, has this to show:

• In Germany, Japan and elsewhere, rapid revival in the name "democracy" of the forces which brought on the holocaust.

• In America, callous disregard in that same "democracy's" civil injustices so many and grievous the GUARDIAN cannot find space to list them all.

• In Washington, the flowering of a "defense" pork-barrel beside which Harding corruption pales to lily-white.

IN HENDERSON., N.C.

Dixie frame-up convicts textile strike leaders

only two and a half hours on July 23 to decide that eight textile union leaders were guilty of conspiracy to blow up installations at the struck Harriet-Hender-son cotton mills. It took Judge Raymond B. Mallard even less time to sentence the men to prison terms ranging from two to

The convictions were the latest in a series of blows against the AFL-CIO Tex-tile Workers which has been fighting for its life in Henderson since Nov. 17, 1958. At that time it struck the mills when its offer to renew its contract without change was countered by management insistence on eliminating a 14-year-old arbitration clause. The mills remained closed until February when one shift rewith non-union help. Later another shift was brought in under protection of 400 National Guardsmen who were sent by Gov. Luther Hodges to "keep peace" in the town. The two shifts have orked ever since under military protection and the strike has continued, discouraged but unbroken.

ROUGH STUFF: Violence marked the strike from the beginning. Non-strikers homes and cars were stoned; strike lead-ers were beaten. There were some dynamitings of mill property which caused small damage, but union leaders main-tained they were deliberate provocations by management.

On June 13 four strikers were arrested by the State Bureau of Investigation for conspiracy to blow up three mill buildings. Two days later a grand jury indicted them along with four others, including three top union leaders.

In court the prosecution (which by a quirk in state law included three lawyers employed by the mill owners) presented 14 witnesses. Of these, 13 were SBI agents. They reported on "oral confessions" they said some of the defendants had made. One tried to play a recording made secretly at an alleged planning meeting of the defendants, but defense objection kept it out of the record.

STAR WITNESS: The other witness

Coak, APL-CIO News

was Harold E. Aaron, an unemployed mill hand from a nearby town, who testified that union leaders had asked him to help with the dynamitings. Under cros examination the defense brought out that Aaron had a record of convictions for assault with a deadly weapon, stealing a police car, impersonating an officer of the law and several arrests for drunkenness. He also admitted receiving $300 from the SBI.

Defense counsel also pointed out that Aaron had brought an unfair labor practice charge recently against the union and one of its leaders for failure to arbitrate his case after he was fired from a job. But on the stand Aaron said it was the leader against whom he had brought the charge who had solicited his help in the alleged dynamitings.

Considering the atmosphere Judge Mallard maintained in the court room, the verdict was no surprise. To the spectators he said: "Anyone who shuffles his feet so the court may hear it will be held in contempt." The order, he added, applied to "gentlemen and ladies, boys and girls and children."

CASE APPEALED: Judge Mallard handed out the following sentences: Boyd E. Payton, union regional director, Lawrence Gore and Charles Auslander, un-ion organizers, six to ten years; Warren Walker, Robert Edward Abbott, Calvin Ray Pegram and John Martin, five to seven years; Malcolm Jarrell, two to

Mallard gave Payton the stiffest sen-tence, he said, because the union leader's speeches during the strike had been To Auslander, Mallard "inflammatory." "Even though you came from New York [ten years ago] and even though the union sent you, you are not above the law. The people of the State of North Carolina are not ready to destroy this country."

After the sentencing, chief defense counsel Hugo Black Jr., son of the Su-preme Court Justice, announced that he would appeal to the state Supreme Court. The defendants were released on bail ranging from $10,000 to $25,000. INDUSTRY SHOWS RECORD PROFITS

No end to steel strike seen until stockpiles are depleted earned during the past three years' rejected.

A CCORDING TO THE LATEST statistics, American industry never had it so good. A Business Week survey based on the first six months of 1959 indicates that corporate profits this year may reach $50 billion-$5.1 billion more than in the record 1955. But if industrial employes and technologically unemployed expected to share the prosperity, they were quickly sobered by the current steel

The steel industry reported $694,200,000 profits for the first half of the year; $163.4% more than during the same period last year. U.S. Steel, the industry leader, showed $255,000,000 in after-tax profits, an all-time record, and also established records in sales, production and shipments. By union statistics the company was earning an annual profit of $4,345 per employe. But to Roger M. Blough, chairman of the board of U.S. Steel, "the earnings of the steel industry are not in any way excessive." In fact, he said, they support the industry's contention that striking steel workers' wages must be frozen for a year to halt an "inflationary spiral."

THE TIME-TABLE: If Blough's poker face was covering a smile to some, others could see him following a well-timed industry script. The timetable called for Negotiations have continued sporadi-cally with the help of U.S. Mediation chief Joseph F. Finnegan, but no progress has been made. Eisenhower appointed Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell as a one-man fact-finder, but he has made no report. With no score of its own, the union has danced to industry's tune from the beginning. But all the union's steps have been backward. In addition to paring demands for more money, McDonald quick-ly dropped all work-sharing proposals and agreed to write into a new contract that local working conditions "are not intended to prevent the company from continuing to make progress." In addition he offered to publish a letter declaring that the union's position is not opposed to technological change or automation of DIM PROSPECTS: McDonald's strategy has been to call for help from Washington. Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) with 31 other Senators was to introduce a resolution on Aug. 11 asking President Eisenhower to set up a factfinding board to recommend settlement terms after he set a time limit for a voluntary settlement.

Few thought the President would take to the scheme. Blough had already promiced to hold steel prices for a year if the government kept out of the dispute. White House action was likely only if the strike remained unsettled when inventories are depleted. Then Eisenhower can declare a national emergency and under the Taft-Hartley Act, order the strikers back for an 80-day cooling off

For the technologically unemployed steel workers, the situation did not look good. There was little likelihood they would go back to mills. It seemed more likely others would join them after the contract is signed. And that will be when management is good and ready.

Fact for today

the strike to continue until the end of September when steel inventories will be nearly depleted. At that point the industry will begin real negotiations with the weakened union.

From the course of the dispute thus far, industry's script seemed to be running right on schedule. Negotiations with the AFL-CIO United Steel Workers began on May 5. The union pointed to the industry's record profits and presented a list of 250 demands. They included worksharing proposals to help the unemploy-ed who had been replaced by new ma-chines, and substantial wage increases. Management countered with a proposal for a wage-freeze to "combat inflation."

As the negotiations continued the union pared its demands, but management added to what it wanted. President Eisenhower said he was neutral but asked for a "non-inflationary" settlement. As the June 30 deadline neared, union president David J. McDonald agreed to extend negotiations for two weeks. He also called for a fact-finding board made up of the industry's and the union's "elder statesmen."

UNMOVED: Management rejected the idea and gave its "final offer" from which it has not moved: a one-year wage freeze; end of cost-of-living increases; and an eight-point program to give it greater control of working conditions in the

On July 15 the union struck after its offer to extend "the same rate of economic progress as steel workers have

Highlander Folk School raided, teachers arrested

THREE TEACHERS and the Negro ed-ducational director of Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tennessee, were arrested in a police raid July 31 and charged with drunkenness and illegal posession of liquor. The raid, the four contend, is part of a campaign of harassment to shut down the school, for the past 27 years dedicated to training students to improve interracial and unionmanagement relations in the South.

Septima Clark, 61-year-old director of the school, was released on $500 bail and her case turned over to a grand jury. Bail was set at $250 for the three men— Brent Barksdale and Guy Carawan of Los Angeles, and Perry Sturges of New York—who were ordered to appear be-fore the Altamont Peace Court Aug. 12.

Attorneys Cecil Branstetter and George Barrett of Nashville, who represented the defendants, argued that the arrests and charges are mere pretexts to satisfy local foes of the school who re-sent its interracial character. Earlier this year Highlander was the subject of an investigation by a committee of the Ten-nessee Legislature which recommended that the school's charter be revoked, but no action has been taken.

District Attorney Gen. Ab Sloan told reporters that he had "had a person watching the school for me" ever since the legislature directed him to file a suit to revoke the school's charter. "But they gave me information mostly on integra-tion and communism," said Sloan, "and I wasn't satisfied I could be successful at that. I thought maybe this was the best shot and I think now I'll be successful."

"Stung by the reproach, his wife answered, 'Don't—you're just as responsible as I am. I would give anything in the world to have them back. That was a time of panic, and everyone lost their heads

So I have nothing to show for all those years of association with her, nothing."

It may indeed be the case that many of the thousands who fought to save the lives of the Rosenbergs, and win new trials and vindication for them, similarly have "nothing to show" for the fervent weeks and months of that association. Not because of having burned personal sou-venirs; but because in the anguish which followed the executions, many could not bear to look back over the lives of the tormented couple, nor vicarious-ly endure the travail which their Death House letters to one another, to their children and their counsel, brought to light.

N OW, SIX YEARS after, the details of those harrowing days and years are becoming freshly relevant. New figures and forces are turning toward the Sobell Case, the living op-portunity to reveal the dreadful injustices which the Rosenbergs

DU 1-1069 NO 3-4874 suffered to death, and which have kept Morton Sobell in prison for nine years. There is new discussion of the case, less readiness to declare it "closed."

In England scientist Klaus Fuchs, allegedly the inside man at Los Alamos who delivered supposed secrets to the "ring" the Rosenbergs were accused of aiding, has been released from prison and has gone to East Germany. Curiously, the N.Y. Times printed nearly two full columns on Fuchs' release, including detailed background of his case, without once mention-ing the Rosenbergs or Harry Gold, the self-styled courier to whom Fuchs was said to have passed some of his secrets.

This circumstance gives significant new support to the contentions of both William A. Reuben and John Wexley, in their books on the case—The Atom Spy Hoax and The Judgment of Julius and Ethel Rosen-berg—that Gold lied about his alleged contacts with Fuchs; and indeed that Fuchs never laid eyes on Harry Gold despite all the fulminations on the case by J. Edgar Hoover and subsequent FBI apologists.

case, but rather to call to readers' attention the fact that two books are still available which reveal all we may ever know of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg from their own words; and the esteem and love in which their old friends neld them when, after their deaths, a most competent reporter, Virginia Gardner, retraced the paths of their childhoods and maturing.

The letters you can read in an hour, but you may not forget them for a lifetime: Ethel's letter to her boys, after their visit when both she and they knew that all hope was gone:

"Maybe you thought that I didn't feel like crying, too, when we were hugging and kissing goodbye, huh, even though I'm slightly older than ten? .

"Darlings, that would have been so easy, far too easy on myself . . . But it would not have been any kindness, at all. So I took the hard way instead of the easy, because I love you more than myself, and because I knew you needed that love far more than I needed the relief of crying.

Too, the appalling callousness and lack of knowledge of the case on the part of those from whom the world sought clemency, revealed in the letters of both Ethel and Julius on the visit to Sing Sing of Federal Prison Di-rector James V. Bennett, should be made clear to all who can be reached, in the new re-thinking of the Rosenberg-Sobell case.

Both the letters-The Testament of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg (222 pp.)—and Virginia Gardner's The Rosenberg Story (126 pp.) are now available at $1 each, postage-paid. The Rosenberg Story in paper covers can be had three copies for $1.

Order through Guardian Buying Service (blank on p. 8).

A peace proposal

Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling concludes his book, No More War, with a chapter headed: "A Proposal: Research for Peace." Following is a summary of Dr. Pauling's proposal, excerpted with permission of Liberty Book Club from its Prometheus Paperback edition issued this summer. The Prometheus Paperback edition is $1.85 at bookstores, $1 to members of Liberty Book Club, 100 W. 23rd St., New York 11.

H OW IS PEACE in the world to be achieved? How are the great world problems to be solved, without resort to war, war would now lead to catastrophe, to world suicide?

I propose that the great world problems be solved in the way that other problems are solved—by working hard to find their solution—by carrying on research for peace. . . .

It has been estimated that applied research is being carried out in the U.S. at a rate corresponding to an expenditure of about 4 billion dollars per year. It accordingly constitutes about 1% of our

During recent decades greater and greater use has been made of research and of the services of scientists and other scholars in the conduct of war and the preparation for war.

The Second World War was fought almost entirely with weapons and by methods developed by scientists.

THE TIME has now come for the greatest of all problems facing the world, the problem of peace, to be attacked in an effective way.

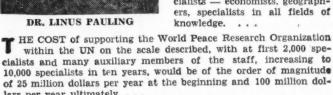

I propose that there be set up a great research organization, the World Peace Research Organization, within the structure of the UN.

The duty of the World Peace

Research Organization would be to attack the problem of preserving the peace, to carry out research on preserving peace in the world, to carry out research on peace. This would mean, of course, carrying out research on how to solve great world prob-lems, problems of the kind that have in the past led to war. It would also involve attacking the problem of how to prevent the outbreak of a nuclear war by design or by accident . . . The World Peace Research Organization should be a large one. It should include many scientists, representing all fields of science, and many other specialists - economists, geographers, specialists in all fields of lars per year ultimately....

We may estimate the total cost to the world of the military machines at the present time as about 100,000 million dollars per year. The cost of the proposed World Peace Research Organization within the UN would be only about one-tenth of one percent of this sum.

The damage that would be done to the world by a nuclear war is inestimable. What, in dollars, would be the loss to the U.S. if half of our people were killed? What, in dollars, would be the half of our people were killed? What, in donars, would be the property damage to the U.S. if New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and scores of other cities were destroyed? We might say that the property damage would amount to several million million dollars. If there were a chance of one in one hundred thousand of preventing this damage, it would be well worth while to do so. It would be well worth while to pay the corresponding sum, 100 million dollars, to prevent the loss. The World Peace Research Organization would be a cheap insurance policy.

W E LIVE NOW in a period of rapid change—a period of revolution, of nuclear revolution. Everything in the world has been changed as a result of scientific discoveries. I think that the greatest change of all is that in the ways of waging war—the change from old-fashioned molecular explosives, the one-ton TNT bomb, to the great nuclear weapon, the superbomb that is twenty million times caused war to rule itself out....

The time has now come for war to be abandoned, for diplomacy to move out of the nineteenth century into the real world of the twentieth century, a world in which war and the threat of war no longer have a rightful place as the instrument of national policy. We must move towards a world governed by justice, by international law, and not by force.

S TEAM CURLING FROM a second floor window over a dry cleaning shop in Washington brought Fire Capt. Alvin E. Hazard ning last week. As he stepped through the second floor window from his ladder, three men asleep on the floor jumped up and ran out. Hazard made his way downstairs and began to trace the source of the steam. He found it came from a leaky pipe in the basement. The pipe furnished steam for the pants presser, but Hazard noticed it also led elsewhere. He traced it through the building to a Rube Goldberg contraption which served as a corn whiskey still. Upstairs police found the store owner asleep; beside his bed were two empty bottles of home brew. They arrested him. . . . In Stafford, England, police arrested Leslie Thompson because he got a bank loan to "expand his business." Thompson, they said, was a burglar and he used the loan to buy a van for hauling his loot. . . . ### To Remind You Of Items GBS ROUNDUP! We Always Have On Hand

PHONOGRAPH RECORDS are the largest single source of GBS income. We sell thousands a year because we save thousands of dollars a year for our customers. There's no more economical way to buy 12" LP's than through GBS at our standard price (with a few exceptions) of 3 for $10. Our biggest sellers are Paul Robeson, The Weavers, Martha Schlamme, Leon Bibb, Russian artists, and a wide variety of classical records. A complete catalogue of our hundreds of offerings will be ready soon.

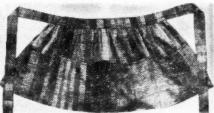

In the meantime, have you ordered your PAUL ROBESON AT CARNEGIE HALL? This album and the wonderful, just-released album of ODETTA, are our current best sellers. You can have them for $3.75 each or both for $7, a big $2.90 saving over the published list prices.

Because the GUARDIAN is a natural medium for the sale of good books, publishers and distributors offer us many unusual buys at large discounts, which we pass along to you. This year we have sold hundreds of sets of the Russian and Chinese children's books, and more recently the wonderful "science fiction" stories by Yefremov, books by Tolstoy, Gorky and Michurin.

Our Special Book Buy this week is the two Rosenberg books reviewed on Page 6-Virginia Gardner's The Rosenberg Story, and the letters- The Testament of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg. GBS offers them at the regular price of $1 each, or both books for $1.50.

ALSO, ALWAYS ON HAND are the wonderful OPTIMA and KOLIBRI typewriters, imported from East Germany. You cannot buy typewriters of comparable quality anywhere near our prices of $59.95 for the Kolibri and $75 for the Optima. Literature is available upon request.

SPECTATOR-

Egypt seven years after

THE THIRD CLASS TRAIN from Cairo to Alexandria took seven hours instead of the usual three or four. A conductor, who occasionally struggled through and over the swarming passengers and their bundles, joked: "We carry all the world. It's too heavy. No wonder we're slow."

At every village more peasants crowded into the car until the doors could 10 longer be opened against the press inside. Thereafter, babies, sacks of wheat, baskets of onions, cucumbers, bread, a doublebed mattress, bundles of wide-bladed hoes (the peasant's all-purpose tool) were thrust through windows—followed by their owners who sometimes got stuck midway and had to be pulled through. Through the crush a stream of beggars and peddlers managed somehow to make their way.

These peasants were not the poor and the landless—the majority of Egypt's population could never afford a railroad journey—but the relatively well-to-do taking their families on business or but the relatively well-to-do taking their families on business or pleasure trips to Tantah or Alexandria. Their talk was a series of quarrels. When a peddler stepped in a basket of bread, a battle was fought with bottles as weapons. An old woman who complained that someone might have been killed was told by the aggrieved peasant: "All the better if both our heads had been smashed. We should both go to hell. I'm tired of life anyway." A student who tried to jump to his death from the moving train was badly beaten by religious police. An argument between soldiers and sailors here. by railroad police. An argument between soldiers and sailors became a fist fight.

DAY EARLIER nearly all the passengers voted for the local councils of the government-run National Union (non-voters were fined). The elections had been described for weeks as a major step to v and s democracy, but when questioned, the passengers responded with cynicism or disinterest.

"It's just one of their games," was a common reply. "A lot of rubbish. They won't do anything for us." A Tantah merchant explained: "You must vote, say, for ten out of 220 candidates. All are unknown except the government men. How can you possibly choose?

Few knew what the National Union is. It was set up in the 1956 Constitution "to replace the political parties, and to select delegates for election by popular vote of the National Assembly." In the 1957 elections the selection was made by a three-man committee headed by President Nasser. A few popular candidates survived, but the Assembly was dissolved at the time of union with Syria.

Since then, little was heard of the National Union until the spectacular decline in Nasser's prestige following the Mosul revolt, his anti-Soviet tirades, and his inability to form a united Arab front against Iraq. Thereafter, there was a sharp change in accent.

NTERNATIONAL RECONSTRUCTION and "pyramid democracy" became the goals. Pyramid democracy is the process by which local National Union councils will elect higher councils from which the President will appoint half the members of the new Assembly. He will choose the other half from the members of the old Syrian and Egyptian parliaments.

Government propaganda styling these rour-stage manee tions as a "school for democracy" educed scorn for the most part. Egyptians have not forgotten the national movement's long fight for democratic institutions nor its success in winning the 1923 Constitution which, in terms of civil liberties at least, was better than today's. In the early Thirties, when reactionary Prime Minister Ismael Sidky tried to impose a two-stage system of indirect elections. a popular movement swept him out of office. Yet Sidky's proposals were liberal compared to pyramid democracy.

President Nasser declared on the eve of the July 23rd anniversary that "bread for all should be the inevitable prelude to liberty for all." Seven years after the Revolution, both bread and liberty seem further off than ever to Egypt's impoverished millions. In early 1957 there was hope in the Egyptian countryside: today there is widespread discontent. In town and village, the regime seems completely isolated from the people. Recent corrective efforts have not been very successful. The government boasts that it has reduced prices on more than 450 consumer items including textiles, shoes, kerosene and rationed sugar.

N A COUNTRY where the annual per capita consumption of cloth is about five yards, where most go barefoot, where peasants have neither lamps nor machines and use buffalo dung for fuel, price cuts on textiles, shoes and kerosene don't help much.

"They give with one hand and take away with the other," a common complaint in Delta villages. Some remained silent when asked: "Have things changed for you in these last years?" Some said: "In Farouk's time we could at least get food." Others replied: "Yes, for the worse. But nobody can speak. The, do things to people who do." (In the campaign against progressives which is continuing here peasants have now for the first time been arrested in appreciable numbers.)

Growing discontent explains why Nasser now emphasizes that the past seven years have been "a period of preparation for the revo-lution" with "radical changes" only now about to begin. The key-note of the July 23rd celebrations was the UAR's industrialization program which is "to double the national income in ten years" and create 800,000 new jobs.

But the answer to the deteriorating conditions of the people has not been found, and will not be, by a regime which operates only from the top down. -Tabitha Petran
