Judge Hough, who is conducting the trial, said that he would listen to arguments on this motion Monday morning, when the trial is to be resumed, and Heinze and his lawyers seemed to be greatly pleased. On Monday morning there is also to be argued the question of admitting at this point the history of the pools in United Copper, beginning back in 1905, which the government started to bring out yesterday against the objection of Heinze's lawyers, who contend that inasmuch as Mr. Heinze was not a member himself of any pool in that stock when he was president of the Mercantile National Bank and at the time covered by the indictment, this line of testimony is irrelevant. The contention of the government is that the United Copper pools. cordial assurance was received that the attitude of the company is to discourage Sunday labor, and to reduce the same to the lowest minimum consistent with the necessary work that must be done at such a plant on Sundays and holidays, and must, therefore, be viewed as work of necessity.

In Ireland the ancient usages are still adhered to as firmly as they were three thousand years ago, when they expressed a religion, and the gods of the people were the visible forces of nature. The awakening of spring to life and heavity after the death sient. nature. The awakening of spring to life and beauty, after the death sleep of winter, especially touched the human heart with joy and hope, and was celebrated with music and garby the professional village bards and corronned over by the old women at in "Colonial Prose and Poetry." edit-wakes and christenings, or told with awful solemnity to the listening children as they crouch round the turf drawing translated the name of their inhabitation from the ancient savage the weird stories of witches aid demons, of the dead who walk in their solved to have the new name constitution from the ancient savage name to Ma-re Mount; and being remons, of the dead who walk in their solved to have the new name constitution from the ancient savage name to Ma-re Mount; and being removed to have the new name constitution from the ancient savage. mons, of the dead who walk in their solved to have the new name containnights, when it meet them is fatal to the living; did devise to among themselves to or of the mysterious fairy race, the fallen angels of heaven, who have been cast down to earth to expiate their sins, and who live in crystal caves paved with gold beneath the sea, or in the mountain clefts, where the caverns age lit by diamonds that provided a cave of bettes to be seen. their sins, and who live in crystal caves paved with gold beneath the sea, or in the mountain clefts, where the caverns are lit by diamonds that stud the rocks, and who sip nectar from the cups of the flowers, and weave their gossamer robes of the sunbeams and the glittering dewdrops. And many a pretty girl, as she listens, longs to dance in the moonlight with these fairy beings under the scented hawthorn tree, for the Sidhe (the fairles) are more beautiful and gracefairles) are more beautiful and graceful than any of the children of earth, though a deep sorrew rests on them, knowing at the last day they are des-tined to eternal death, while the human race will live in heaven for everman race will live in heaven for evermore.

A number of ancient traditions circle especially round May Day, called in Irish La-Bel-Taine (the day of the sacred Baal fire) because in the old pagan times, on May Eve, the Druids lit the great sacred fire at Tara, and as the signal flames rose up high in the air, a fire was kindled on every hill in Erin, till the whole island was circled by a zone of flame. It is a saying among the Irish: "Fire and salt are the two most precious things given to man." Fire, above all, was held sacred by them, as the symbol of the Deity and the mystic means of purification, and three things were never given away by them on May Day—fire, milk or butter—for this. purification, and three things were never given away by them on May Day—fire, milk or butter—for this would be to give away luck. No one was permitted to varry a lighted sod out of the house, or to borrow fire in any way. And no strange hand was allowed to milk the cow, for if the first can were filled in the name of the department of the devil there would be no more than the first can were filled in the name of the development of the first can were filled in the name of the development of the first can were filled in the name of the development of the first can were filled in the name of the development of the first can were filled in the name of the development of the the devil there would be no more milk that year for the family.

A curious superstitition is still prevalent among the people that on May Day the ancient kings of Ireland arise from their graves and gather together a great army of the dead. Make green garlands, bring bottles out:

And fill sweet nectar, freely about;
troops that the hour has come to fight for Ireland, and they must be ready to march as commanded. Then the spectral warriors clash their shields and respond with wild cries to the kings and chiefs and captains of the nation. The last time the kings arose from their graves was, it kings arose from their graves was, it is said, in 1845, when the tramp and the shouts of the marching men resounded distinctly through the hills; but when the people rushed to the apot where the shields clashed and the voices sounded, not a form was visible, the hosts of the dead warflore had vanished into air.

May Day in old time was the period of greatest rejaicing in Ireland, a fes-tival of dances and garlands to cele-brate the resurrection of nature, as November was a time of solemn gloom and mourning for the dying sun; for the year was divided into these two epochs, symbolizing death and resurrection, and the year itself the popular procession, wreathed with the rowan and the marsh marigold, and bearing, suspended within it two balls to represent the sun and the moon, sometimes covered with gold moon, sometimes covered with gold ent, and from that time sought. awake

Yet the control by the capitalist class has been challenged, and its right to rule and profit has been shown to be false. The worldwide Socialist party has been organized for no other purpose, and year by year it brings to itself an increasing number of persons who believe in the justice of the case. Today, International May Day, there will be in America hundreds of thousands of persons who will march through the streets and who will listen to speakers at the assembling places. That is a beginning of the work. After it comes the serious consideration of what the working class must do to save itself from further degradation. After that comes the consideration of what must be done to gain control of the power that justly belongs to the working class.

The last year has shown clearly and unmistakably that labor, the working class, takes all the risks. In every department of industry the list of the killed and the maimed is a long one. All of them were killed in creating new wealth, or in transporting it to where it could be exchanged most advantageously, that is, at the highest profit. But from that risk which exacted such a toll the working class gained nothing except a chance to work. Not a single state legislature passed an effective liability law. Not a single state legislature seriously considered the position of the working class.

There is no reason, from the standpoint of the employing class, why the legislatures should trouble themselves about workingmen. Except in a few scattered instances, there are no representatives of the working class in any state legislature, not to mention the national legislature. The workers have not seriously considered the question of attending to their own affairs, of legislating for themselves, and of guarding themselves. It has left all such important work to a class whose interests lie in a wholly different direction. The working class, in a word, has surrendered all power that can be used against itself.

But such a condition of affairs is one that cannot last. Each November shows it at the ballot box. Each International May Day shows it in the real demonstration of labor.

Today, when spring is awakening, when all the earth gives promise of what can be, it is fitting that the working class, every worker in the land, consider what is to be the future of the working class. It holds absolutely the power to compel, if it sees fit. It can legislate for its own benefit, if it sees fit. It can take control of the government, and as it is the class that is responsible for practically all advance, control of the government belongs to it. Nothing stands in the way except its own unwillingness to work for itself. It has the numbers, it has the power, it has the brains. A class that can enrich society to the extent society has been enriched during the past century, and notably the past generation, has within its hand the power to do what it will for itself.

Unless it does there is but one alternative; it must submit fur ther than it has submitted, it must be meeker than it has been, and it must be more obedient than in the past. The growing wealth of society, wealth created by the working class, will be used against it. The powers of government, given into the hands of opponents, will be used against it. And in the end absolute submission will be exacted for the privilege of doing further work and of creating further Socialists have long realized this state of affairs. They know that it is impossible for the working class to remain much longer half free and half dependent. Either there must be absolute freedom, or there must be abject submission. Freedom carries with it the right to control one's own affairs. Up to the present the worky in the legislation concerning its own affairs

But May Day is a declaration that such a condition of affairs cannot much longer last. It is a declaration that workers are arousing to the necessity of ruling themselves. All the men who march have sensed in a measure the truth of this. Thousands of those who will line the way have come to a dim realization of it. A real awakening, a firm union and a singleness of purpose would speedily bring about the object sought.

hen May Day can assume a better, nobler aspect even than that which it has today. It can typify the period when all humanity awakens to the work of wresting from the earth the wealth that should go for the comfort of all those who earn it, instead of going to those who sit idly by and simply appropriate.

If you have a pamphlet, a leaflet, a book or a paper on Socialism and do not give it away today, you lose a chance. Get together all the printed matter you have, distribute it along the line of march, or give it to some one on your way to take part in the procession.

Let no idle pamphlet escape. Give it away, and the chances are that it will be read. Reading maketh the full man, and reading Socialist literature maketh the strong vote.

It is only natural for Mr. Hearst to be angry at Mayor Gaynor. Hearst assumes that he made Gaynor, and for a creature of his handiwork to rise up against him is unspeakable. But in one thing at least Mayor Gaynor has won respect. He has demanded a showdown on charges of corruption. It has grown to be the custom for men who are accused of being political thieves to ignore the accusation. Readers assume that the charges are merely meant in a Pickwickian, or political, sense. Mayor Gaynor, having been accused of a dirty piece of political connivance, smashes out. It was ows honesty of intention. The same following up accusations by others, the same willingness to meet charges ar it imputations of dishonesty, would usher in a period of really we muckraking. For, in agriculture, after the muckraker has his work, there is a period of planting, and after the planting cultivation, and after the cultivation comes harvesting. To here has been nothing but the muckraking. Socialists alone or anything more. But Mayor Gaynor, in turning on the man ne rake or the ax, shows that he is not stupidly satisfied. He it. Good! e barbarous days, and as I liked the man I have a great regret that he did not rebel and get out into the fresh air that called so persistently to him. Every man should rebel, rather than die, should rebel

If he would only rebel! If he would only refuse to be killed! There are sunshine, pure air, health, joy and vitality for all of us in this world. But we are not allowed to have them, or, rather, we permit ourselves to be deprived of them. Were those of the working class who are doomed to untimely death to rise up now in effective protest our present system of industry would stop short. Preachers of the gospel of work might have to go to work, but it would be healthful. And the rebels, while they would still have to work, would yet not be forced into conditions of work that meant death to them

This unrest that takes us in the spring, this longing to loaf and to get into the country, is the healthiest of impulses.

Tais is the spirit of May Day, the joyous, hopeful spirit, that bids the oppressed and exploited of the earth join hands across oceans and continents in one grand glorification of inbor, in one great apostrophe to the brotherhood of man.

Anthony. But without labor, nature and love would still dwell in caves and wander full of superstitious terrors through an uncomprehended world. Labor conquered the adverse forces of nature and utilized those that favored human development Labor won for man the lands and the waters and the air. Labor led mankind step by step from the first crude tool hewn of stone to the modern appliances of steam and electricity, from the cave-dwelling to the modern city, from blind ignorance and fear to the undisputed rulership of the earth. Labor, inspired by nature and love, gave to mankind immortal

From the chattel slaves who built the pyramids of ancient Egypt to the wage slaves who build the palaces of modern America, labor's history has been one of endies suffering and sorrow. But the winter is behind us, and before us are all the glories of spring, that human springtime coming at least to the downtrodden and disinherited of mankind. meaning of patriotism and interna-

I know that to many Comrades Socialism seems the antithesis of pa-triotism; to me it comes as the ful-filiment of the patriot's ideal, the derstand the real idea of the word, and so become what we may call country-blind. For do you not see, good reader, that inter-national means between-nations, and that without the nations of the world, internation-alism could not exist? Before we can be international we must be national.

be international we must be national.

We, as Socialists, are in favor of international peace. But surely international peace is a peace between nations, not a peace after nations have ceased to exist, like the ideal peace that the Buddhist looks forward to after the destruction of personality. As a clever essayict wrote not long ago, "The golden age of the good European is like the heaven of the Christian; it is a place where people will love each other; of like the heaven of the Hindu, a place where they will be each other. And in the case of national character this May Day has become international, international peace—the peace of the not mean that masquerading fetich. Workingmen of all countries unite whole world—will come through an sometimes called patriotism, which to celebrate the great red letter day increase rather than a decrease of has for its motto. "My country, right of the annals of labor. To take it patriotism, and that one's success in or wrong!" I do not necessarily call a sea text for a little homily on the dealing with a country is more the man a patriot who "dies for his country. more one deals with it as a nation, admirably backed up by the example of the treatment of Scotland and Ireland by England. For many years the last named country has treated riotism; to me it comes triotism; the unit of the patriot's ideal, the swelling of the heart of each citizen of the Tweed to be what they said of the Tweed to be But England's treatment of freeling has been quite different. She has refused to encourage Irish patriotism, to let the Irish love their country, which is a reality, more than the British empire, which is an abstraction. She has refused to regard Ireton. tion. She has refused to regard Ire-land as a nation, and so her greatest enemies today are not Germans, but Nationalists. As Chesterton once been forced to recognize as a nation

I grant those readers of this article who, as considerations socialists, are waxing indignant over the unortho-doxy of my ideas, and who, perhaps, are preparing to unceremonibusly eject me from the common councils of the party; that they are quite where they will be each other. And in the case of national character this can be seen in a curious way. It will generally be found, I think, that the manner of the land and and capital of the less he will attempt to imitate the less he will attempt to imitate it; he will be conscious that there is something in it too deep and too unmanageable is imitate. The English working man who has a liking for France will try to be French; the Englishman who admires France will remain obtained in the landed gentry.

try" in a war which, like the Russo-Japanese, was not a war between two nations, but a fight between the capi-talists of Russia, backed by the czar and his ministers, and the capitalists of Japan, backed by the mikado and his armies. Patriotism will mean, when the apostles of profit go down before the rising tide of the social revolution, when each man has a home and a country that is truly his. that healthy rivalry that exists that healthy rivalry that exists, between the various cities of the United States. The desire of the New Yorker to make his city better New torker to make his city better than Chicago, the wish of the Chica-goan to have his municipal museum better than the museum of San Fran-cisco, all that is healthy and good. And it is municipal patriotism. When land as a nation, and so her greatest the people come into their own in all the nations of the earth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise said, "The one nation that the English would not recognize as a nation in theory, is the one the English have cleek to recognize the recognize as a nation in theory, is the one the English have cleek to recognize as a nation in theory, is the one the English have cleek to recognize as a nation in the relations of the carth, perhaps a recognized as a nation of the present anarytic property to recognize as a nation of the people come into their own in all the nations of the earth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise from the recognized to recognize as a nation of the people come into their own in all the nations of the carth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise from the recognized as a nation of the carth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise from the recognized as a nation of the carth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise from the recognized as a nation of the carth, perhaps a true patriotism like this will arise from the recognized as a nation of the present anarytic patriotism like the people come into their own in all the people come into chistic society. It must. It will—clse we fail.

I hope you have understood me enough to see that by upholding the noble idea of patriotism I do not criticize the international labor movement: rather do I see in it the coming of a true patriotism, a weapon by which nations will become truly national. It is not Socialism that is the foe of patriotism. It is Imperialism—that grasping hydra of capitalistic enterprise that lays its claws on another people's land for the sake of the dollar and cent per cent.
